COMPACT BACKPACK, COMPACT RIFLE,
BIG PERFORMANCE

Although I carry a handgun all of the time, I also like the idea of having a rifle available. One option is to have a weapons vault in my truck in which I can keep a rifle, spare ammo, and maybe even a spare handgun. As good as that option is, however, I would normally only access the rifle when danger threatened. For the most part, it would not be prudent to openly carry the rifle around, since I live in an urban area—make that a high-crime, dangerous area. It would be allowed, as open carry of a long gun is legal for those with a concealed carry license.

I would prefer, however, to have my rifle available, but not obviously so.

I've faced that dilemma before when working on security teams overseas. In some AOs (Areas of Operations), we might face heavily armed attackers with rifles, machine guns, even RPGs. At times, I tried various solutions, partially as experiments and partly as viable weapons options. One of the more useful weapons was a countersniper rifle built for me by Robbie Barkmann of ROBAR.

Actually, the rifle is still available as the ROBAR QR-2F. With a 16.25-inch barrel and folding stock, the rifle is a shade over two feet with stock folded. I've carried it in gym bags, often with a squash racket on the outside of the bag as a distraction.

I like the idea of an even more compact self-loading carbine, though, and have continued to look for one that I can readily carry around with me. The recent generation of 5.56x45mm pistols with a folding arm brace offers one solution. But, I've found an answer that doesn't sacrifice portability to performance: DRD Tactical's Aptus.

When assembled, the Aptus is a full-sized 5.56x45mm carbine, precision made and capable of accuracy equal to or better than most AR15s. Yet, it can be carried in a backpack that measures 18" x 9". That's portable enough to take just about anywhere. As with other DRD take-down rifles or carbines, the Aptus disassembles into three main components: receiver/stock, barrel, and QD rail/forearm. For stowage purposes, the barrel and rail can be mated into one unit.

With practice, assembly of DRD rifles becomes smooth. I can usually get one of mine ready to shoot in somewhere between two and three minutes. The two most time-consuming aspects of assembly are removing the thread protector from the barrel and tightening the barrel collar with a wrench (supplied with the rifle). Admittedly, just grabbing your AR15 from your vehicle and bringing into action would be faster, but the Aptus is really best suited for a scenario where it is slung on your back because you don't want people to know you have a carbine along. Presumably, if you can legally carry around your Aptus, you can carry your concealed handgun and use it if immediate fighting capability is needed.

I would advise anyone acquiring a DRD Tactical takedown rifle, read the instructions carefully. It is important to lock the bolt back before assembly or disassembly. Care must be taken to insert the gas tube properly in the receiver; then it is important to remember to open the pushpin and locking lever before sliding on the rails. After assembling and disassembling the rifle/carbine a dozen times, it all becomes second nature.

I had tried an earlier DRD takedown 5.56x45mm carbine that used the standard AR-type collapsible stock. I like the Magpul adjustable, side-folder on the Aptus much better, both for stowage and for comfort when shooting. The Battleworn finish doesn't make the Aptus shoot any better, but I have to admit, I like the way it looks. A consideration for many likely purchasers, though, will be that an Aptus with standard black finish is $300 cheaper.

As I practiced assembling and disassembling the Aptus while watching Fox News, I considered what I saw as its "mission." At one point, I thought of it as a companion CQC carbine, but then I thought, why waste its range and striking power? It could give me 300-yard+ capability. I reached what I feel is a logical compromise. For stowage in the backpack, an optical sight will have to be removed anyway, so why not have two optical sights, one for CQC and one for longer range?

For CQC, I chose the Trijicon TA47R-2. This 2x20mm compact ACOG uses the red triangle that I find fastest for quick target acquisition. It is similar to the red chevron on Aptus' barrel and rail/forearm; note that the thread protector is still on the gas tube and barrel.

Aptus receiver with stock folded; barrel/rail assembly is above. These are the two components as they would come out of the backpack.

The barrel/rail of the Aptus stowed in the largest pocket of backpack; visible to the right is the Leupold scope in a knife rug to protect it.

the TA31RCO-A4CP USMC ACOG I use on my favorite M4, so I've had a lot of practice using it quickly. Although I chose the TA47R-2 primarily as an urban CQC optic for use at 50 yards or less, I have used it on hanging steel plates to good effect at 100 yards. Once zeroed, this small ACOG stows quite readily in the smallest pocket on the Aptus's backpack (your choice of the backpack or hard case from DRD).

For longer range, I chose a Leupold 3-9x40mm model with illuminated TMR reticle that I have been using for some years. The current equivalent would be the Patrol VX-R 3-9x40mm with FireDot TMR. With Leupold QD rings, the scope can be zeroed, then removed to stow in the backpack. I marked positions along the rail to show where each optic would need to be re-mounted. Based on taking each on and off a couple of times, they hold close to zero, though for shooting past 300 yards with the Leupold, I'd want to fire a test group. I wrapped the ACOG in some bubble wrap to protect it, but found a better solution for the Leupold. I found one of the 16-inch padded knife cases sold to collectors that protects the scope perfectly and fits into the compartment with the barrel/rail assembly.

Two offhand double taps at 25 yards fired at the "hostage taker" with Federal 62-grain American Eagle FMJ.

Engaging offhandedly with the Aptus mounting the ACOG; note the red dot to mark where the arrow on the Trijicon symbol should be positioned to hold zero. Because of the location of the slots on the rail, the dot could not be positioned exactly under the point of the arrow.

My compact backpack now holds: the disassembled Aptus, two types of optics, wrench for tightening the barrel collar, three 30-round P-mags, and instruction manual. There remains room for a multi-tool and a few other small items.

I did my shooting tests based on the two uses I foresaw for the Aptus. With the ACOG TA47, offhanded at 50 yards, using Black Hills 60-grain SP, I fired a three-shot group into two inches. Also, at 25 yards, I set up one of the hostage rescue targets I use for quick-engagement drills and fired two double taps into the head of the terrorist using Federal American Eagle 62-grain FMJ. I am confident I can use the Aptus for CQC effectively with the ACOG mounted.

To properly check the Aptus' accuracy, I mounted the Leupold and fired three-shot groups at 100 yards. Black 50-yard, offhand, three-shot, two-inch group using Black Hills 60-grain SP ammo.

Three-shot, 100-yard, 1¼-inch group using Black Hills 60 SP.

200-yard, four-inch group with Black Hills 77-grain Sierra MatchKing; three shots went into two inches.

Hills 60-grain SP produced the best groups, but Black Hills 77-grain MatchKing and Federal American Eagle 62-grain FMJ performed well, too. To check the Aptus at longer range, I fired five rounds of Black Hills 77-grain Sierra MatchKing at 200 yards. The five-shot group was $3\frac{7}{8}$ ", but three shots went into two inches.

I feel confident that the Aptus can group better than I can, so I would expect a better shooter to get one-MOA groups consistently with good ammo. I mentioned that I found taking off and replacing the optical sights had little effect on zero; neither does disassembling and reassembling the rifle. I have found the same to be true when disassembling and reassembling other DRD rifles I've tried. With the Aptus, I have taken it to the range two times since initially zeroing the optical sights. It was disassembled and placed in the backpack as I left each time, and reassembled for shooting when I got to the range. At the ranges I was shooting (200 yards or less), zero remained consistent. On a rifle carried as a preparedness/combat weapon, zero should be double-checked on any range session as part of your training.

As part of my evaluation of ergonomics and handling for the Aptus, I fired at hanging plates at various distances, using cover, from prone and kneeling positions. The Aptus was handy enough that it was a pleasure to fire in every position I tried.

Another point I should mention about shooting with the Aptus: I found that DRD's use of a folding side cocking-handle, similar to that of the FN FAL, was a great improvement on the standard AR15-type cocking handle. It was much easier to use when firing prone or from a rest. It also gave more leverage with less effort. Another plus was the Magpul stock, which allowed slight length adjustments if shooting from a seated, prone, or standing position.

Close-up of the Leupold 3-9X scope mounted on the Aptus.

Ergonomics of the Aptus were excellent for shooting prone or kneeling.

Firing the Aptus offhandedly at 50 yards at hanging plates.

I'm impressed with the Aptus. At $1,695 for an Aptus in black, I consider the price a bargain. The carbine is competitive in quality with higher-end AR15s, but offers loads of bonus features, such as the improved charging handle and Magpul stock. Of course, there is also the ability to disassemble the Aptus and carry it in a compact backpack. I'm a great believer in the precept that, in most instances, no one should know I'm armed until I present my weapon to counter a threat. I believe that

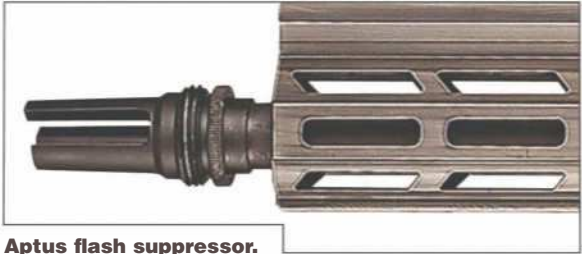

In Thompson's opinion, the FN FAL-style cocking handle of the Aptus is an improvement on that used on the standard AR15.

Magpul stock allows quick adjustments if needed for varying shooting positions. The Aptus may be fired with the stock folded.

about the handgun I carry, and I believe that about my “Just In Case” long guns. For me, the Aptus offers a level of covertness that I like. Admittedly, however, it is not ready to go into action instantly. That is the mission of the handgun or vehicle rifle or shotgun.

The Aptus, instead, allows you have an unobtrusive serious weapon along. I’ll admit, too, that I fall prey to the Aptus’ “tactical cool factor.” Maybe if I were younger, it would be the “Transformers’ factor”—it’s a backpack, then it’s a combat carbine!

The bottom line is that the Aptus is a really good 5.56x45 carbine, but it also stows in a backpack. FN

The Micro RONI Stabilizer with Glock installed is shorter and lighter than any other faux SBR Tarr has ever shot and allows for carbine-like accuracy out of a handgun.

THE CAA MICRO RONI STABILIZER— GIMMICK OR GO-TO?

By James Tarr

I'm not sure where I was when I first saw the original RONI carbine conversion kit from Command Arms Accessories (CAA)—perhaps the SHOT Show's Media Day at the Range—but it was different enough that I remember stopping and investigating (usa.caagearup.com).

The RONI was a big polymer shell into which you inserted your Glock (now other pistols as well). The shell had a stock so you could shoulder your pistol like a rifle, and a rail on the top so you could mount iron sights or an optic. However, after my initial peek at the product, I lost interest for a couple of reasons. First, the RONI required you to register your pistol as an SBR (short-barreled rifle)—after all, you're putting a stock on a pistol, which under current federal law is illegal without additional

The only physical difference between the Micro RONI (as seen here) and the Micro RONI Stabilizer is the stock on the former and the arm brace on the latter.

CAA MICRO RONI STABILIZER

Tarr shooting an original full-size RONI in 2010, not long after they were introduced. The Micro RONI is smaller and lighter, and the Micro RONI Stabilizer does not require registering your Glock as an SBR.

unConstitutional paperwork infringements. Actually, the ATF has ruled that merely possessing a RONI and a pistol that fits inside it constitutes an SBR. The NFA is completely and totally un-Constitutional, and I hate doing anything that legitimizes it, such as jumping through extra legal hoops and paying more money for something for which I shouldn't have to. Second, the RONI, at nearly $400 at the time (if I remember correctly), was nearly the cost of a pistol. It's even more expensive now.

Subsequently, CAA introduced a slimmer version of the RONI called the Micro RONI, and then versions of the full-size and Micro RONI that replaced the stock with a stabilizing arm brace. For all my love of faux-SBR AR-15s with arm braces, for some reason the RONIs with brace just didn't attract my attention, maybe because in photos I thought they looked a bit clunky, or maybe my brain was still stuck in its initial "not interested in RONI" gear.

Luckily, my editor asked me to review the Micro RONI Stabilizer, and I say "luckily" because my eyes have been opened to not just this product, but its potential.

Crack The Shell

First, let's look at what the Micro RONI is before we address what it can do. My mouth keeps wanting to say "macaroni" instead of Micro RONI, but I fight it every time because I know where the name comes from—the designer named it the RONI after his daughter, and you don't mess with somebody's kid.

As I mentioned before, the RONIs are polymer shells that accept pistols and are designed to provide added utility. As the Micro RONI Stabilizer comes with a stabilizing arm brace instead of a stock, attaching it to your pistol is perfectly legal, and your pistol remains a pistol. The only physical difference between the Micro RONI and Micro RONI Stabilizer is the latter replaces the folding stock with a folding arm brace.

The original RONI models were designed for Glock pistols, but currently CAA makes the full-size RONI (with stock or arm brace) for a number of different pistols, including models from Beretta, CZ, HK, SIG, and Springfield, among others. However, currently the Micro RONI Stabilizer is only available for the Glock 17 (22, 31) and Glock 19 (23, 32).

I secured a model to fit the Glock 19, as it has been Glock's biggest-selling model since its introduction and one of the best-selling pistols in this country, period. FYI, the Micro RONI Stabilizer only fits Gen 3 and 4 Glock models—more on that later. The RONI is available in black, green, or tan.

The limiting factor to pistol fit, I'm guessing, is slide profile, as what allows you to work the slide of the pistol once it's inside the shell is a polymer charging handle that slips down over the rear section of the pistol slide. It weighs just .8 ounces, so it should not affect the weight (or reliability) of your Glock at all.

The charging handle is T-shaped, and where it fits over the slide, it has ridges (at least on the Glock model) that slip inside the slide serrations, locking it in place. It has a big cutout on top, so no matter what rear sight you've got on the pistol, the charging handle will fit over it, and it'll still work in the RONI. The sights on my G19 are the taller-than-factory Trijicon HD XR sights, and they work, no problem.

The chunky Micro RONI Stabilizer doesn't look like much, and its price tag seemed a bit steep for Tarr. At least, until he shot it.

RIFLE OF THE YEAR.

Small frame .308 rifles have been surpassed. Not just in weight savings, but durability too. The Revolution from POF-USA is the smallest .308 AR pattern rifle available. That's because it's the same size as your AR-15.

Unlike others, there is nothing left to upgrade on this battle rifle. It comes complete with a single stage match grade trigger, billet receiver set with ambidextrous everything, and much more.

At 7.3 pounds you are not sacrificing performance and durability for weight savings, you're voting for innovation in your firearm choices. Discover how we made this possible at POF-USA.com/Revolution.

The T-shaped charging handle fits over the top of the Glock slide, and it is inserted in the RONI's receiver once you lower the gate. Tarr learned the Micro RONI works with Gen 3 and 4 Glocks, but not the new Gen 5.

The barrel shroud is clearly marked for Glock model fitment. Notice all the vents in the Micro RONI, to keep the exhaust gases from melting the polymer chassis.

If you've got tall suppressor sights on your pistol, the front sight will fit inside the RONI fine, but rear suppressor sights are another animal entirely. The rear sight will bind, but it will be pressing against three polymer ribs inside the shell that are independent of everything else and seem designed to be consumable—which means you can grind them down if you need to and it won't affect anything else on the RONI. It probably voids your warranty, but whatever.

Once the pistol is inside the RONI, the charging handle doesn't have the space to slip or twist off the slide even if it wanted to—it's an ingenious design that is amazingly simple. As the charging handle is attached to the slide, it reciprocates with each shot.

The polymer walls in the Micro RONI are thick, and this piece is obviously built tough. There is a hatch at the bottom rear of the unit. Push in a button, slide the hatch backward, and then you can pivot it downward.

With the hatch open and the charging handle attached to your slide, simply insert the muzzle of the pistol into the RONI's body, tilt the whole gun upward, and push forward until the "extraction button" clicks. The "extraction button" is a bar that locks into the slot in the Glock's frame rail, and is the primary lockup point for the pistol inside the RONI. Once the pistol is in place, close the hatch and push it forward, and it locks against the rear of the pistol. To remove the pistol, you have to pull downward on the extraction button on both sides of the receiver. Installing or removing a pistol, including installing the charging handle, should take you barely a minute.

These are all thick, beefy polymer parts holding the pistol in place, and the Micro RONI is obviously designed to be durable and last a long time. The pistol frame absolutely does not move inside the Micro RONI housing. It is as rock solid a fit as you can get between polymer and polymer.

With the brace folded, the Micro RONI Stabilizer is just 14.5 inches long and empty weighs just four pounds.

A closeup of the Glock inserted into the Micro RONI Stabilizer, wearing the charging handle. Notice how huge the ejection port of the RONI is.

With the slide of the Glock locked back, it's even easier to see just how much room the engineers have given ejecting brass so they don't hang up on the RONI receiver.

Whoever was in charge of uploading the specs for the Micro RONI Stabilizer on the CAA web page apparently skipped the day in math class covering metric to American conversions. No, the stabilizer does not weigh 720 ounces (45 pounds)—although if it did, recoil would be pretty tame, am I right? That's not even a misplaced decimal point—according to my new scale, the Micro RONI Stabilizer weighed an even two pounds empty. That's 32 ounces, for those of you who went to public school, and less than 12 parsecs for you Hillary voters.

The Micro RONI Stabilizer is just over 19 inches long with the stabilizing arm brace locked into place. With the brace folded to the side, the unit is 14.5 inches long. That makes this piece eminently compact for storage and transport, but be advised that the brace does not lock open or even have a detent, the brace just swings free, except when it is locked into place.

You can shoot your pistol with the brace folded, however the brace does somewhat get in the way, and it will flop about unless you're a lefty. The hinge and push-button lock for the brace are thick polymer, the pivot pin aluminum, and the brace itself is rubber with nylon straps for securing it tightly around your forearm.

When you want to use the arm brace as such, you slip your arm through the opening in the rubber body in back, take a firing grip on the pistol, and then tighten the nylon strap around your forearm. It provides a very steady platform, and the angle on the front of the Micro RONI allows you to use your other hand to provide even additional support.

While the brace itself is made by CAA, the brace design is licensed by CAA from SB Tactical, the inventors

The only thing Tarr didn't like about the Micro RONI Stabilizer was the bottom of the receiver. There were a few sharp bits that wanted to cut his knuckles, and he wished he could choke up higher on the Glock.

of the AR-15 pistol stabilizing brace. Those of you paying attention in class will know the ATF under our current administration wrote SB Tactical a letter stating very clearly that firing one of its otherwise unmodified braces from the shoulder was not illegal and did not change the legal definition of its pistol. When used in such a way, the Micro RONI provides a very short length of pull, but it is eminently usable.

On the underside of the RONI receiver, right by the pivot pin for the brace, is a QD sling swivel socket. There are two-inch polymer rail sections on either side of the RONI near the front, and the rail atop the RONI receiver stretches for 10 full inches.

The Micro RONI isn't all polymer—there is an aluminum barrel shroud in the front of the piece. When the pistol is locked into place, the shroud encloses the last quarter inch of slide, protecting the polymer from muzzle blast. The shroud extends three inches past the muzzle, and that's what you see sticking out the end of the RONI. The shroud itself is clearly marked for pistol fit, to avoid any confusion or mistakes. To the rear of the shroud, on the top and sides of the Micro RONI housing, you'll see vents to keep the polymer from getting overheated by the exhaust gases of the pistol.

As the Micro RONI housing prevents access to the slide of the pistol, CAA smartly included a slide release on the left side of the unit. It is a big, square, serrated button that you push downward. It takes a bit of force to work...just like the slide release on the Glock. I found myself just using the charging handle instead, as it was quicker and easier.

CAA included its Advanced Upgrade Kit with the Micro RONI Stabilizer, which includes a 500-lumen weapon light, single-point sling, flip-up sights, and thumb rests.

The ejection port on the Micro RONI is huge—almost three inches long and nearly an inch and a half tall. Your empty cases won't have any problem clearing the gun.

For an additional measure of security, CAA has included a pivoting trigger guard cover. If you want, you can pivot it upward and it will block access to the trigger. I wish the cover had more of a detent—it moves too easily for my taste, but that's a minor complaint.

Go, No Go?

When I first went to test the Micro RONI Stabilizer, I installed the new Gen 5 Glock 19 I had on hand for review, and ultimately learned that the Micro RONI doesn't work with Gen 5 Glock.

The tolerances inside the Micro RONI Stabilizer are tight enough that the new ambidextrous slide release on the Gen 5 Glock binds things up. Badly. The RONI's slide release doesn't work at all because of the slide pressure, and the increased side pressure on the frame was even causing trigger reset issues. The pressure was so much, when I tried to drop the slide by working the charging handle, even that didn't work. I had to drop the slide by sticking a screwdriver inside the open ejection port of the gun and physically push down on the lever, just so I could get that pistol out of the RONI.

When I swapped out the Gen 5 G19 for my personal Gen 3 G19, everything was roses—the Micro RONI worked perfectly. Considering the Gen 5 Glock is brand new, and there are 12.5 bazillion Gen 3 and 4 Glock 17s and 19s in the country (I looked that number up), this really isn't much of an issue.

With the pistol installed, the Micro RONI Stabilizer balances right over the grip, which makes it very quick-handling. It also seems even lighter than it is. My only real complaint about the Micro RONI is an ergonomics one, and minor—I can't get my hand as high on the pistol as I prefer. My knuckles press against the underside of the RONI chassis, and normally when shooting a Glock, I choke way up on it. And there was a little bit of a sharp edge and a tiny pointed piece of polymer left over from the mold that pressed directly against my thumb knuckle. Wearing gloves, you wouldn't notice it at all, but I knew that it would slice me open the first time I pulled the trigger, so I took a file and gently removed the offending bit.

CAA offers a number of accessories for the RONI and Micro RONI, both individually and in kits. For this article, CAA sent me the Advanced Upgrade Kit, which retails for $175 and includes a single-point bungee sling, flip-up front and rear sights, polymer angled thumb rests, and a weapon light.

The CAA flip-up sights are polymer and the price of Magpul BUIS sights without the quality. The polymer thumb rests are inexpensive and useful, provided you don't mind the added width they add to the RONI. The bungee sling is great and sells separately for only $22.00. However, it's the flashlight that is the killer piece in this kit. CAA sells this flashlight separately for $67.99, and I highly recommend anyone interested in the Micro RONI buy one.

You might have been wondering what that thing is on the front of the Micro RONI Stabilizer, just underneath the barrel shroud. That's the placeholder for the weapon light that CAA offers. Technically, it's the MRFL—Micro RONI Flash Light. It just slides right in from the front and clicks into place, and has a click button to activate it on either side. The flashlight is amazingly small, weighs just 1.4 ounces, and features a high-efficiency LED bulb powered by one CR123 battery. It provides 500 lumens of light in a very wide, even beam.

Good To Go

With flashlight installed, iron sights and my Trijicon MRO mounted, the Micro RONI Stabilizer with empty Glock 19 installed weighed four pounds even. That's pretty heavy for a pistol...but amazingly light for a 9mm faux-SBR. The Micro RONI is shorter and lighter than any other "long gun handgun" I've ever shot—MP5K, AR, CZ Scorpion EVO, etc.

My older son thought it looked really cool. My younger son thought it looked really weird and asked, "Why this, instead of, say, an MP7?" So, I had to explain to him at length how the MP7 was not legal to sell to private citizens due to un-Constitutional laws, until his eyes started to cross, probably because he was off on Christmas break and I'd had talk radio on in the car quite a bit and had been lecturing him about politics a lot already—mostly about how the Trump Administration ending Obama's

"Net Neutrality" was not the world-ending calamity all his teachers and friends thought it was, but just people who love America ending a power grab by the government.

Let's cautiously step back from another potential political rant (don't look it in the eye) and get back to the subject at hand. I had three basic questions regarding the Micro RONI Stabilizer:

1. How much more accurately could I shoot at distance?
2. How much faster could I shoot accurately at distance?
3. Once the Micro RONI Stabilizer was zeroed with the pistol inside, would removing and reinstalling the pistol change zero? After all, the sights are mounted to the RONI, and the Glock is attached to the RONI via its frame. So technically, there is no hard metal-to-metal connection between the sights on the Micro RONI and the Glock's barrel.

To answer these questions would simply require some serious range time. Seeing as the Glock-A-RONI (see what I did there?) legally is a pistol but functionally hovers somewhere between pistol and pistol-caliber carbine, I decided to do the testing at 50 yards—that's a heck of a long shot for a pistol, but easy for a pistol-caliber carbine mounting a red dot, and about the furthest (realistically) that you'd want or need to use either for defensive purposes.

Honestly, the biggest limiting factor I expected to experience in shooting accurately at long range with this package was the quality of the Glock trigger—or lack thereof. The factory trigger pull on Gen 3 and 4 Glocks runs somewhere north of 6.5 pounds and is far from short and crisp. Trigger pulls like that do not lend themselves to long-distance precision. Or precision, period. I've tweaked the striker spring and installed a TTI 3.5-pound connector (www.tarantacticalinnovations.com) on my Gen 3 G19 to bring the trigger pull down to just over four pounds, which is a weight much more conducive to hitting targets, whether the pistol is inside a RONI or not. I also installed the TTI aluminum magwell to help speed reloads—because why not?

My trip to the range was very interesting. As this testing was one in the middle of Michigan winter, all 50-yard testing was done on the indoor rifle range at my FFL, Double Action Indoor Shooting Center and Gun Shop in Madison Heights, MI. All ammo during this portion of the testing was the SIG Elite 124-grain JHP, which is nearly a +P load, and does about 1,160 fps out of this Glock.

Target A: After initially zeroing the Micro RONI, Tarr tried to shoot for groups and discovered the point of impact moving to the right as the Glock settled into the RONI chassis. But then it stopped.

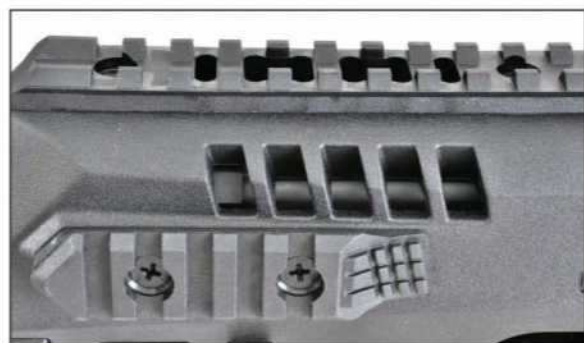

Target C: This 13-inch group at 50 yards is indicative of how accurate Tarr is with just a Glock 19 shooting offhand. With the Micro RONI Stabilizer, his groups were cut in half or better.

Target B: If you excuse the one flyer, Tarr shot a 4.25-inch 20-shot group at 50 yards shooting the Micro RONI Stabilizer off sandbags. That is far more accurate shooting than he can accomplish just using a Glock 19.

I sighted in the Glock 19-filled Micro RONI Stabilizer at 25 yards, and then shot a group. Or, at least, I tried to. Check out the photo of what I've labeled Target A. Notice a little horizontal movement, and a big arrow? The point of impact on the Micro RONI began shifting right as I continued to fire, ultimately moving almost five inches right from where I had initially zeroed the piece. But then—it stopped. I re-zeroed the Trijicon MRO and proceeded to pound a lot of rounds downrange, but once the point of impact was done shifting, it was done.

There are five vent slots on either side of the RONI chassis for cooling. Inside the left-most slot, you can see the rear of the aluminum barrel shroud where it covers the end of the Glock slide.

Target D: After removing and reinstalling the Glock 19 from the Micro RONI Stabilizer twice, Tarr checked the zero, and discovered it had shifted less than an inch at 25 yards.

Glock in the Micro RONI. The Scorpion weighs over two pounds more than the Glock in the Micro RONI, but it is a straight blowback design, and felt recoil in the Micro RONI was the same or less than with the Scorpion.

Offhand, shooting slowly, I could do seven- to eight-inch groups at 50 yards. Honestly, even though the trigger pull on my G19 is far from stock, it's the sproinky Glock trigger that is the biggest handicap to shooting good groups at distance.

Now for the test. I pulled the Glock out of the Micro RONI then stuck it back in and shot another group. I honestly didn't know what to expect—I expected some zero shift, but whether or not the rounds would still be on paper, I had no idea. I was pleasantly surprised—my zero shift was about one inch to the left. That's it. One inch at 50 yards would be margin of error for most handguns.

I knew that putting 20 rounds into a group not much bigger than my palm is far more accurate than I can shoot a Glock 19 using just its iron sights, but for testing, I tried anyway. I found that my groups off a sandbag with the bare Glock at 50 yards were about the same as shooting the Micro RONI Stabilizer offhandedly, and it took me a lot more time when I wasn't using the RONI. And shooting the

I suspect what happened was that once live fire commenced, the Glock and Micro RONI needed a few rounds downrange before they settled into their final fit.

Once I was satisfied that the point-of-impact shifting was done, I moved the target out to 50 yards and proceeded to shoot groups off sandbags. My first attempt was a 10-round group that measured a hair under seven inches. Meh. For my second attempt, I actually aimed, and did that whole "trigger control" thing I've read about in gun magazines, and shot a 20-round group that measured a mere 4.25 inches, once you discount the one flyer outside the black. Even with the flyer, the 20-shot group only opened up to 5.5-inches—check out Target B. That black bullseye, FYI, is 5.5-inches wide.

Sandbag work done, I stood up and did some offhanded shooting. The Micro RONI Stabilizer recoils with the Glock, and I could see the MRO's dot bounce up and to the right before returning to the same spot. I've got a CZ Scorpion EVO pistol, which reminds me a lot of the Tarr computed drop at distance for several different pistol loads. Just about all of them start to drop precipitously past 100 yards. He does not recommend slow 147-grain loads, as their trajectories are even more rainbow-shaped.

Glock offhandedly, well, the one labeled Target C is pretty indicative of my attempts with the Glock—an oval 20-shot, 13-inch group. That’s of course good enough to hit a bad guy every time, but it shows the stark difference between shooting a traditional concealed-carry-sized handgun at distance and using the Micro RONI.

After shooting the Glock 19 on its own, I stuck it back in the Micro RONI and quickly re-checked zero at 25 yards—check out Target D. You’ll see the zero has maybe moved half an inch to the right of the original zero.

To summarize, I found that at 50 yards, I could shoot roughly twice as fast, and twice as accurately, using the Micro RONI as I could using just the bare Glock 19. And removing and reinstalling the pistol from the Micro RONI does cause a zero shift, but not much more than an inch at 50 yards.

I guess CAA offers that 10-year warranty for the Micro RONI for a reason—there’s very little chance you’ll need it.

You’ll notice the rear sight on the RONI is not mounted all the way to the rear. If you shoot the Micro RONI with the rear of the brace near or against your shoulder, the distance from the brace to the receiver of the Micro RONI is so short, you’ll be chewing on the rear sight if you try to mount it all the way to the rear.

Flush magazines are great for storage/transport, but big sticks complete the package in looks and capacity. I used both Glock factory 15- and 33-round magazines and some extended ones from SGM Tactical as well in my testing. All worked perfectly.

Even though the Micro RONI is in no way a carbine, on my second trip to the range with it, I headed to the 100-yard line and did some more experimenting. While my results weren’t as pretty, due both to the increased range and the cold outdoor weather, there were no surprises—groups were roughly twice what they were at 50 yards. With the Micro RONI at 100 yards, I was able to hit Pepper Poppers almost as fast as I could pull the trigger. That’s very impressive.

One thing I did notice was that with a 25-yard zero, my groups at 100 yards were about four inches low, which got me to thinking about the ballistics of pistol rounds at distance.

For this article, my editor suggested I extend the reach of the Micro RONI by securing one of the extra-long Glock barrels various companies offer. Long, carbine-length barrels will give you 100–200 more fps in a 9mm, which makes a difference when you’re shooting at distance. Alas, it was not to be.

Length Matters

IGB Austria makes extended barrels for the Glock 17 and 19, from 7.5 inches all the way out to 16. Its 10-inch and 16-inch barrels feature an “impulse chamber” that threads around the barrel in front of the slide. It isn’t just the slide that recoils in a semi-auto pistol, the barrel moves as well. If you add a lot of weight to that barrel (like stretching it to triple the standard length) it’s going to cause malfunctions as it slows down the barrel. The IGB impulse chamber increases backpressure to cycle the slide properly and stop those malfunctions. The backpressure is the same reason pistols wearing heavy barrel-mounted sound suppressors work.

The slide of the Glock pushes right up against the aluminum barrel shroud inside the RONI, so the IGB barrels with the impulse chamber simply won’t fit. I had a 6.02-inch Glock 17L barrel on hand, but the locking block for the 17L and 19 are different sizes.

IGB makes a 7.5-inch barrel for the G19 with no impulse chamber, but after examining the RONI, I realized it wouldn’t work either. Because of the way you have to pivot the gun to insert it, no barrel more than about 1.5 inches longer than the factory barrel will fit inside the Micro RONI.

Most suppressor-ready extended threaded barrels are no more than an inch longer than factory, so they would work, but spending the money for such a barrel that would only marginally increase velocity was definitely not a dollars-and-“sense” decision for me. However, if you already have an extended threaded barrel, it’ll give you more velocity with no downside inside this package.

When it comes to handgun bullet drop at distance, handgun bullets tend to drop like stones past 100 yards, and that’s doubly true if they leave the muzzle at less than 1,100 fps. They’re both slow and have low ballistic coefficients.

The red dot of the MRO is roughly 2.75 inches above the bore of the Glock inside the Micro RONI. Zeroed at 25 yards, you won’t have more than a four-inch drop at 100 yards as long as you’re not shooting slow 147-grainers out of your Glock 19. Past 100 yards, though, just about every pistol bullet will give you a rainbow trajectory. I’ve included a chart for quick reference of the drops of three different loads.

Personally, I’ve become a big fan of the Fort Scott Fort Defense 80-grain Solid Copper Spun round for PSBRs. Out of the G19’s short barrel, it still does nearly 1,350 fps, which means it drops a lot less at distance, and because it’s so pointy, the lathe-turned copper solid bullet penetrates deeply, although it won’t expand at all.

Conclusion

While I’ve shot RONIs before, I’ve never spent any serious time with one, and I found myself liking the Micro RONI much more than I thought I would. My attitude about this product went from “borderline gimmick” to “wow, this is one of the most useful and light and compact 9mm faux SBRs I’ve ever tested.”

Instant faux SBR—just add Glock.

The Micro RONI drastically improves the distance at which you can shoot a handgun, as well as the speed at which you can hit those targets. It much more closely retains zero than I was expecting. In fact, it exceeded every expectation I had. I would love to stick the full-auto Glock 18 inside one of these things, but again, due to un-Constitutional laws, this is another gun that I am not permitted to own. Maybe someday...

If you wanted to make the most (ballistically) of the Micro RONI and were going to buy a gun to fit it rather than the other way around, I would recommend getting the model that fits the Glock 17. The Micro RONI for the G17 isn’t any larger, and, if at some point you wanted to put in a longer barrel, the six-inch barrel of the 17L will fit inside the Micro RONI meant for the G17, no problem. Depending on the load, you’ll be getting 50–200 fps more than you would out of a Glock 19.

At a suggested retail of $375.00, the Micro RONI is not cheap, but it is much less expensive than buying a separate pistol-caliber carbine. For the cost of a used handgun, you can get a faux pistol-caliber SBR that is as reliable as a Glock, and, as the Micro RONI still is just a handgun, it doesn’t require any federal paperwork.

When zeroing the RONI at the 50-yard indoor range, Tarr used SIG Elite 124-grain JHPs. A short pistol mag made it easier to shoot off sandbags.

of its physiology as well as its nefarious megalomaniacal aspirations. They engage the monster with handguns, rifles, and a fire axe before ultimately incinerating it with high-voltage electricity.

Back Story

The 1951, cult-horror classic The Thing from Another World has been canonized as arguably the greatest science fiction film of the 1950s. This Christian Nyby/Howard Hawks thriller played on societal distrust of scientists at the height of the nuclear age, as well as the pervasive public paranoia associated with alien invasion.

In this movie poster of The Thing from Another World we see an M-1 Carbine which was used in the movie.

James Arness of Gunsmoke fame played the giant malevolent plant monster in the 1951, cult-horror classic The Thing from Another World.

My mom saw this movie in the theater when it debuted, and she said it was only on her second screening that she was able to keep her eyes open from opening credits through final curtain. The original film was shot in Glacier National Park as well as within a Los Angeles ice storage plant.

Many of the actors were 1950s B-movie regulars, and Gunsmoke's own James Arness played the monster, albeit with a lot of creepy makeup. The scene wherein the creature's severed arm continues to move while on the dissection table was 1950s science-fiction gold. The movie was drawn from a 1938 novella titled Who Goes There? written by John W. Campbell under the pseudonym Don A. Stuart. This compelling story was resurrected in 1982, by esteemed moviemaker John Carpenter under the simplified header The Thing. A prequel of the same name hit theaters in 2011, helmed by Matthijs van Heijningen, Jr.

The original novella depicted an alien being that could assume the physical and mental characteristics of anything it touched. The 1951 version depicted the monster

Our intrepid heroes wielded 1911A1 pistols against the rampaging alien in the 1951 movie The Thing from Another World. Designed to punch big, gaping holes in Islamic terrorists, John Browning's classic hogleg was fairly ineffective against what is in essence a giant perambulating space turnip.

The 1911A1 pistol and M1 Carbine were standard security weapons for Air Force personnel in the 1950s. This made them a natural choice to arm USAF airmen battling an alien invader in the frozen arctic wastes.

The M1 Carbine was one of the greatest martial success stories of World War II. Designed in a remarkably brief period of time, around six million copies rolled off the lines. At the height of production, we made 65,000 of these lithe little guns per day.

as a humanoid plant creature impervious to bullets, but susceptible to heat. The two more modern iterations crafted monsters more true to the writer's original vision. All three movies sported some mighty cool weapons.

Battling A Plant Monster With 1951-Era Hardware

The research station in the original film was under Air Force control, so the uniformed personnel there had access to the standard military small arms of the day.

That means M1 Carbines and 1911A1 pistols. My dad went through Air Force basic training around that time, and those were the weapons he trained on as well. A fire axe comes in handy along the way, and the Thing ultimately meets its gory demise via an improvised electrocution contraption.

Matthijs van Heijningen, Jr. helmed a prequel to the 1982 John Carpenter classic The Thing in 2011. In this movie, a mixed group of Norwegian and American researchers battle a shape-shifting alien that invades a frozen Antarctic research station.

The 2011 film also included the Beretta 92F. As the movie was set in 1982, and this pistol did not become commercially available until 1983, this was a scant temporal anomaly.

The beleaguered survivors in the 2011 film wield Walther P38 pistols. A remarkably advanced design for its day, the World-War-II-era P38 is still a competitive combat pistol.

John Moses Browning's 1911 pistol is a national treasure. Originally crafted to kill Islamic jihadists during the Tagalog Insurgency in the Philippines around the turn of the 19th century, the 1911 and its big thumb-sized cartridges set a standard for martial effectiveness that has yet to be bettered. Upgraded to the 1911A1 configuration in 1924, this Colt stallion served ably and well until the Beretta M9 supplanted it in 1986.

The U.S. Army accepted the M1 Carbine some six weeks before the first bombs fell on Pearl Harbor. Designed to arm support troops like truck drivers and mortarmen, for whom a full-sized M1 Garand might be unduly cumbersome, the tidy little carbine weighed a mere five pounds and earned an immediate and enthusiastic following. While the straight-walled .30-caliber cartridge has been denigrated as underpowered when compared to the full-sized .30-06, this really isn't a fair comparison. The Carbine was designed to replace the handgun, not the rifle, and in this role, it was superb. A friend who carried one for nearly a year in combat in Europe once told me that the light-recoiling .30 Carbine round was quite effective in actual practice.

More Recent Iterations

The 2011 film was actually a prequel to the 1982 version. Both modern movies were set at the South Pole rather than the North. The team's handguns included Walther P38s and Beretta 92Fs. The first 92F pistols became available in 1983, so that was a bit of a temporal anomaly.

The storyline follows a mixed group of American and Norwegian researchers who, you guessed it, discover a frozen alien creature in the Antarctic wastes. This monster messily assimilates every living creature it contacts. It is, however, unable to assimilate inorganic material. This means that dental fillings and earrings are giveaways that prove a character's humanity. The movie ends with the last surviving humans chasing after an infected sled dog from a helicopter, trying to kill the beast with a scoped HK33A2 rifle.

The Thing, John-Carpenter Style

John Carpenter's 1982 iteration starred Kurt Russell as a roguish helicopter pilot desperate to survive in the frozen Antarctic wastes, when friends are not always what they seem. The film opens with that same pair of Norwegians firing a scoped HK 93A2 rifle from a helicopter at that same escaped sled dog. Though grossly similar, the HK33A2 of the 2011 film is selective fire, while this HK93A2 is semiauto only. It is an acute awareness of arcane minutiae of this sort that keeps guys like me from cultivating many deep and meaningful friendships with normal people.

The Norwegian shoots up the station in pursuit of the hound, so the station commander kills the gunman with a single shot to the poor sot's eye from his Colt Trooper.

The HK33A2 assault rifle never found quite the commercial legs of its larger sibling, the G3, or its baby brother, the MP5. However, for its day, the HK33A2 was a reliable and efficient combat tool.

The Norwegian helicopter pilot fumbles a grenade and blows himself up. Should any of you actually speak Norwegian, the chatter in that Viking tongue between these two characters at the very beginning of the movie spills all the dark secrets that ultimately unfold over the next one hour and forty-nine minutes.

The dog naturally turns out to be a shape-shifting alien monster. Each subordinate component of the creature behaves as an individual entity, so the survivors find that they can determine whether a person is human or alien by subjecting a blood sample to heat. I still cringe a bit when they use a scalpel to lay open everybody's thumbs. Kurt Russell utilizes the igniter flame of his flamethrower to heat a wire until it is glowing hot and plunges it into the blood in a petri dish. The alien blood scatters violently and scares the crap out of you the first time you see it.

Russell wields an Ithaca Model 37 slide-action shotgun. A Colt Detective Special revolver gets a little screen time as well. While firearms don't inconvenience the monster much, it doesn't seem to care much for flamethrowers. The film ends with a really cool scene involving a flamethrower, a cluster of dynamite, and two characters slowly freezing to death while warily eyeing each other, uncertain of the other's humanity.

Technical Stuff

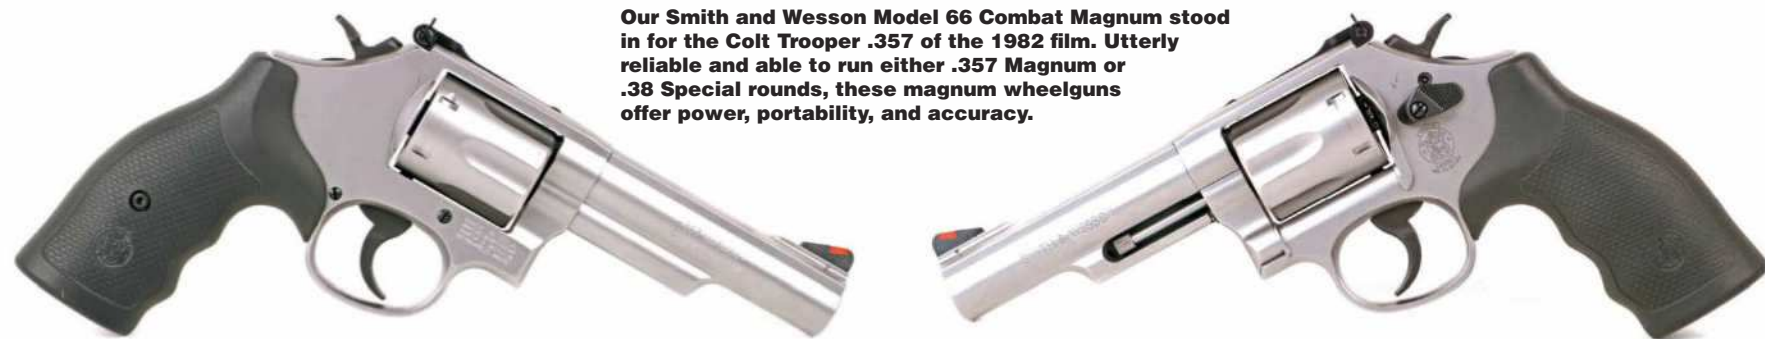

The P38 was one of the most advanced combat handgun designs of World War II. The 9mm is a soft-shooting round, and the pistol holds eight. The P38 incorporates the same superb single-action/double-action trigger pioneered in the PP-series pistols. The magazine release is on the heel, and the hammer-drop safety rides on the left side of the slide.

The Colt Trooper was produced from 1953, until 1985, as a relatively low-cost law enforcement and defensive handgun. Barrels came in 4-, 6-, and 8-inch versions, and the guns could be had chambered for .22LR, .22WMR, .38 Special, and .357 Magnum. The single-action/double-action trigger was a thing of beauty, and collectors prize the guns today.

The .223 roller-locked HK rifle saw production from 1974, until 1989. It was an elegant weapon that did not find nearly the commercial legs of the larger G3 or smaller MP5. The gun would accept standard HK trigger packs, so long as the correct ejector was installed.

The Ithaca Model 37 slide-action shotgun was produced from 1937, until the present. Yet another John Browning design, the Model 37 is unique in that it both loads and ejects out the bottom of the receiver. Built in

Our Smith and Wesson Model 66 Combat Magnum stood in for the Colt Trooper .357 of the 1982 film. Utterly reliable and able to run either .357 Magnum or .38 Special rounds, these magnum wheelguns offer power, portability, and accuracy.

Kurt Russell starred as RJ MacReady, a roguish helicopter pilot fighting for survival against a malevolent parasitic space alien in the 1982 John Carpenter movie The Thing. Holding your dynamite fuse in such close proximity to your flamethrower igniter shows imminently poor tactical judgment in this writer's opinion.

The Ithaca Model 37—a bit unwieldy in action and sporting prodigious recoil with full-power loads, the venerable 12-bore nonetheless offers unrivalled downrange horsepower.

12-, 16-, 20-, and 28-gauge versions, the Model 37 has seen wide use by military, LE, and civilian users.

Alien Busting

The 1911A1 hits like a freight train downrange, and is adequately accurate for up-close social work, even in its unadorned GI guise. The M1 Carbine is a dream to shoot. Markedly more accurate than any combat handgun, the Carbine is indeed fast, handy, and maneuverable. At 10 meters, the little rifle punched one jagged hole.

We used a Smith and Wesson Model 66 as a stand-in for the Colt Trooper. In this configuration, it is soft-

For those of you who love the opening scene with the HK33 in action and don't want to shell out $4,000 for a discontinued HK93, there is an option. shooting and accurate. Reloading is a chore, but it goes bang every single time you squeeze the trigger and shoots straight.

We used a Mossberg 500 in lieu of the Ithaca Model 37. Recoil gets tiresome with full-power buckshot and slug loads, but nothing else offers comparable downrange horsepower. Depending upon what sort of alien you might be battling, a proper 12 bore could be a good choice. It will reliably rip ghastly holes in things at reasonable ranges.

The Walther P38 was an advanced weapon for its time, and it remains a sweet-shooting combat handgun today. The heel-mounted magazine release is incrementally slower than that of the 1911, but it offers an extra round on tap. The tilting lock action eventually evolved into that of the Beretta 92.

The HK93A2/33A2 was state-of-the-art for its day. Unnecessarily complicated and heavy when compared to more modern designs, the roller-locked HK guns are precise instruments hampered by their long mushy combat triggers. Accessories are more expensive than might be the case for competing platforms, and the manual of arms is slower than that of an M4. You do gain some cool points by slapping the charging handle down on a fresh magazine. However, firearms of any sort seem fairly ineffective against what is in essence a big piece of extra-terrestrial celery.

At typical alien engagement ranges, the 1911A1 and M1 carbine exhibited entirely adequate combat accuracy. Both weapons were fast-handling and reliable.

The divine SA/DA trigger of the S&W Model 66 makes it a straight-shooting and comfortable combat wheel-gun. The Mossberg 12-bore is pure death with buckshot loads.

The Walther P38 is a soft-shooting military handgun, while the HK 33A2 is surgically accurate at typical alien close-combat ranges.

The two most recent movies used a variety of flamethrowers, to include a military-issue M2A1 in the 1982 version. For our assessment, we utilized an X15 flamethrower from Throwflame. Mixing diesel fuel and gasoline is easy

The X15 sports top-quality components and a well-reasoned design. An applique propane torch provides the ignition.

It's on, Starman.

In the rarefied field of alien combat, all other tools pale in comparison to the mighty flamethrower. Bulky, messy, and boat-anchor heavy, nothing says, "Go back from whence you came," like a liberal coating of flaming jellied gasoline.

This stuff transforms your fuel into flammable snot that sticks to whatever it touches. While “Flammable Snot” would be a great name for a rock band, the X15 is in essence just a really robust Super Soaker water gun. U.S. MILITARY COMBAT SHOTGUNS

PART III

From Grenada to Afghanistan

By Paul Scarlata / Photos as Indicated

As was mentioned in Part II of this report, American armed forces fielded a larger numbers of shotguns in Vietnam than in any previous conflict. After the end of the war, the U.S. Army had a polyglot assortment of shotguns in inventory, and it was decided to standardize on the Winchester M1200 Trench Gun. This is not to say that numbers of Ithaca Model 37 and Stevens Model 77 riot guns did not continue in service, but with the reduction in the size of the Army, surplus weapons were either discarded as foreign military aid to other countries or destroyed.

In the post-Vietnam years, the U.S. Marine Corps continued to issue the Remington Model 870 Mark 1 shotgun, and in May 1975, they played an important role during the Mayaguez Affair. This event saw Marines recapture the American container ship SS Mayaguez, in combat operations against the communist troops on a nearby island, that had been seized by Cambodian Khmer Rouge forces.

The Model 870 Mark 1 was popular with its users and gained a reputation as a reliable and effective combat weapon. To make them useable in confined areas, some Mark 1 shotguns were fitted with Remington folding stocks. During this time, the U.S. Navy, USMC and Air Force also used Remington Model 870 riot guns for guard and security details.

American soldiers continued to field shotguns in other theaters. There are photos from the Invasion of Grenada (1983) showing American troops carrying M1200 Trench Guns. Three years later, they also saw service, along with

Model 870 Mark 1s used by Navy SEALs, during the Invasion of Panama, when American forces removed the anti-American dictator Manuel Noriega from control of that strategic region.²

In the late 1970s, the Army began searching for a replacement for the Model 1200 Trench Gun. They issued a set of specifications and performance requirements—the MILSPEC 3443E—that any future shotgun would have to meet or exceed. These included being capable of “... firing of 3,000 rounds with no unserviceable, or broken parts and no more than three malfunctions using standard commercial 12-gauge, 2¾-inch, 00 buckshot (9 pellets) shells.... shotguns shall include M7 bayonet and scabbard.”

Both Remington Model 870 and Mossberg M500 shotguns were entered in the trials, and the Mossberg was the winner. On May 30, 1979, Mossberg was awarded a contract for its Model 500 shotgun.

In 1987, the government began purchasing Mossberg M590A1 shotguns. They differed from the M500 in that the 20-inch barrel was fitted with a ventilated metal hand-guard, an extended magazine tube holding seven rounds with lugs to accept the M7 bayonet, and the end cap of the magazine tube could be removed for cleaning and maintenance. All military-issue M500 and M590A1 shotguns were fitted with rubber recoil pads and sling swivels.

All branches of the U.S. armed forces were issued M500 and M590A1 shotguns. Those obtained by the Navy (M500A) were unique in having 17-inch barrels with ventilated metal handguards.

While the Model 870 Mark 1 was admired by the USMC, many of them were beginning to show their age, and in 1989, the USMC began obtaining M590A1s, and they were well-received. At the Fleet Marine training facil-

Where are all the WWII rifles? Why are Mausers hard to find?

After the Iron Curtain fell, tens of thousands of collectable rifles came to America. By 2009 we had emptied most of the communist warehouses and the UN was destroying old rifles. Then our own government cut off our major sources due to the Russia-Ukraine conflict. Then we located some micro stashes of importable WWII rifles in other European countries, but even those disappeared when terrorism motivated the individual European to arm himself.

You should get your Mauser now, because prices will only continue to rise.

ity in Virginia, “About 1000 shotgun rounds are put through each Mossberg each month.....the new Mossberg has been found to be nearly ‘Marine-proof.’ Many of the guns have had more than 10,000 rounds fired through them, far exceeding the current military specifications for shotguns. The Model 590s have held up to the punishment.”³

As in the past, the military found the shotgun to be an eminently practical weapon for security purposes. “Military bases are seldom in isolated areas, populations have grown up around them and many are now in urban areas. This has made the shotgun the preferred security defense firearm at home and overseas. It is effective as a counter-threat weapon and less threatening beyond short range.”⁴

Winchester M1200, Mossberg M500/590A1 and Remington Model 870 shotguns were used by Army, USMC, Air Force, Navy and Coast Guard during Operation Desert Storm (January–April 1991). While their short range precluded them from being main combat weapons in the open desert terrain common to the campaign, they were useful in their traditional roles, providing security for military installations, supply depots and POW camps, night patrols, perimeter guards and for equipping military police.

M1200 shotguns useful for close-range, urban fighting around the city of Mogadishu.

When American forces invaded Afghanistan in 2001, shotguns—primarily Mossberg M500s supplemented with some Winchester M1200s and Remington Model 870s—were much in evidence. As during Desert Storm, they were most useful in urban settings, where engagement ranges were short and soldiers needed to be able to make snap shots at rapidly moving hostiles.

The invasion of Iraq two years later saw a much greater degree of urban warfare, and the shotgun became a primary weapon. It should be noted that while the Army had begun replacing the Winchester M1200 with the Mossberg in 2005, some Army National Guard units that were sent to Iraq were still equipped with them.⁵ To make them more useful in urban warfare, the military equipped some shotguns with folding stocks or pistol grips to make them more maneuverable in confined spaces.

To meet the particular circumstances of urban fighting in Iraq, a new type of shotgun was developed, the Breaching Gun. In order to open the numerous doors and gates common to the architecture of the region, soldiers and Marines began using shotguns firing so-called Breaching Rounds to knock off doorknobs, hinges and locks without risk of ricochets or endangering occupants of the building.

Breaching Rounds are standard 12-gauge shot shells loaded with a slug containing approximately 400 grains of compressed, sintered zinc. Upon impact with the target, the zinc slug disintegrates into a fine powder, eliminating fragmentation.

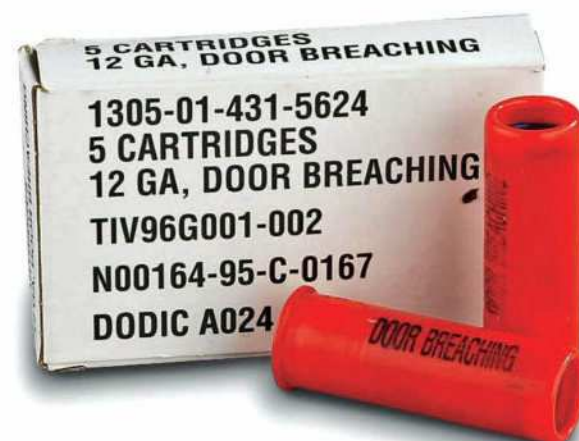

While Breaching Rounds can be fired from any 12-gauge shotgun, purpose-built Remington and Mossberg Breaching Guns were obtained. These generally have short barrels measuring between 10–12 inches, are fitted with muzzle brakes that assist in dispersing the zinc powder after firing, and pistol grips instead of buttstocks.

In the late 1990s, a program was begun to find a shotgun to replace the Mossberg, Remington and other pump-action shotguns then in service. The USMC had used numbers of semiauto Remington Model 11 riot guns during WWII and recommended that a semiauto shotgun be considered.

On May 4, 1998, the U.S. Army Armaments Research Development and Engineering Center issued Solicitation #DAAE30-98-R-0401, requesting submissions for trials to find a semiauto shotgun suitable for military service. The USMC was designated as the lead service on this program and formulated a specific list of requirements. The shotgun had to:

- Be capable of semiautomatic operation
- Be capable of firing DoD-standard 2¾-inch 12-gauge No. 00 buckshot and other shot shells and slug ammunition
- Have a maximum effective range of at least 40 meters (50 meters desired) with DoD-standard 2¾-inch No. 00 buckshot ammunition and 100 to 125 meters with slug ammunition
- Have a length up to 41.75 inches and be capable of reconfiguration to 36 inches or less
- Weigh no more than 8.5 pounds (six pounds desired), unloaded
- Be equipped with low-light-level iron sights and a standard U.S. military accessory mounting rail integral to the upper receiver, to permit the use of other sight-enhancement devices.

Entries from several manufacturers were tested, and Benelli's M4 Super 90 shotgun came out on top.

The Benelli exceeded all of the requirements, including firing 25,000 rounds without the replacement of a major component. In April 1999, it was adopted as the M1014 Joint Service Combat Shotgun (JSCS).⁶

In addition, the British Army adopted the Benelli as the Shotgun, 12 Bore, L128A1. It features a folding pistol grip on the forearm and is usually equipped with a holographic sight.

The M1014 is a gas-operated shotgun designed around the "auto regulating gas operated" (ARGO) system. The short-stroke design incorporates only four parts: two symmetrical shrouds containing two small, steel, gas pistons. The stainless steel, self-cleaning pistons are located just ahead of the chamber, where the gases are hotter and cleaner, resulting in less fouling and more reliable cycling. They push directly against the bolt for fast operation and eliminate the need for the complex mechanisms found on other gas-actuated automatics.

The M1014 uses a self-regulating gas system, enabling it to function with 2¾- and 3-inch shells of differing power levels, without any operator adjustments and in any combination. Some low power rounds, such as less-lethal rubber pellets, may have to be cycled manually.

It has a seven-round tubular magazine under its 18.5-inch barrel. The front sight is a blade with a white dot protected by "ears," and the rear is a fully adjustable Ghost Ring aperture. In addition, a Picatinny rail on top of the alloy receiver allows the mounting of electronic sights, lasers and/or lights. One of the M1014's most distinctive features is its telescoping buttstock with a separate cheek piece and buttplate, which can be slid forward, reducing the length of the gun by approximately five inches, for storage or use in confined spaces. The M1014 is now the standard issue shotgun for the U.S. Armed Forces and a number of federal agencies, although it is apparent that some Mossberg shotguns will continue to see service for years to come.

Field service showed that the M1014 was not adaptable to all situations. Soldiers wanted the ability to carry a 5.56mm weapon to engage the enemy at distances, while at the same time having a shotgun-type weapon for close-range work—but without the necessity of carrying two separate firearms. The answer was the M26 Modular Accessory Shotgun System (MASS).

The MASS was developed at the U.S. Army's Soldier Battle Lab in the late 1990s, to provide soldiers with a lightweight accessory weapon that could be mounted under the forearm of M16A2 rifles or M4 carbines. These would provide soldiers with additional capabilities, such as: door breaching using special slugs, short-range lethality using 00 buckshot, and less-lethal teargas shells, rubber slugs, rubber pellets, or other nonlethal rounds.

The M26 consists of a receiver with a straight pull-type bolt (the bolt handles can be mounted on either side of the weapon), a detachable box magazine, a 7.75-inch barrel with a large muzzle brake and brackets for mounting it under the barrel of the rifle/carbine and weighs less than the M203 grenade launcher. In addition, the M26 can be equipped with a pistol grip and an M4-type telescoping buttstock for use as a standalone shotgun.

In 2003, the first M26s were provided to troops in Iraq and Afghanistan for field trials, and by 2011, were standard issue. Photos seem to indicate that muzzle flash is, shall we say, impressive, but being its positioning on an M16/M4 is lower than the pivot point of the shooter's shoulder, muzzle flip is reduced as the additional weight of the M26 pulls the muzzle-heavy rifle down. But the convenience of having a rifle/shotgun combination that can be brought into action immediately, either way, far outweighs any possible complaints.

Television news footage of the ongoing War on Terror indicates that American soldiers in Iraq and Afghanistan continue to field considerable numbers of shotguns. And, as were Juramentados, Sturmtruppen, Banzai warriors and Viet Cong before them, "It is a well-known fact that terrorists killing our troops in Iraq are not afraid of the M4 and its 5.56mm bullet—but they are terrified of shotguns.”

As I stated in Part I of this series of reports, the shotgun should be considered the most “American” of all fighting weapons. And I believe that American Soldiers, Marines, Sailors and Coast Guardsmen will continue to use the gaping muzzles of shotguns and volleys of 00 buckshot to show America’s enemies the error of their ways.

I would like to thank the following for providing photos and information used to prepare this article: Bruce Canfield, Steve Baerwitz, Stuart Mowbray, Joe Poyer, Lou Behling, Marian Council, Linda Powell, Lisa Warren, Roy Marcot, Christie Gates, Joel Kolander, Benelli USA, O.F.

The Italian army’s use of the aforementioned Villar Perosa Modello 1915 led to it having greater interest in full-auto, pistol-caliber weapons than most military powers of the day.

Italian Submachine Guns

Late in WWI, the Officine Villar Perosa (OVP) Modello 1918 was approved for service. It was little more than a single barrel and action of the Modello 1915 attached to a wooden butt stock and provided with dual triggers for semi- and full-automatic fire.

In late 1918, Beretta’s Tullio Marengoni designed a 9mm carbine known as the Moschetto Automatico (Automatic Carbine) Beretta Modello 1918, using a modified Marengoni designed a simplified model, using a number of stamped steel components; the barrel jacket was eliminated and the separate firing-pin mechanism replaced by a fixed firing pin machined on the face of the bolt. The barrel and wooden stock were also shortened. Known as the Modello 38/42, it had a fluted barrel and a lower rate of fire.

Damascus steel forged to throw them for a curve at only $79

For centuries, a Damascus steel blade was instantly recognizable and commanded immediate respect. Recognizable because the unique and mysterious smelting process left a one-of-a-kind, rippled texture on the steel, and respected because Damascus steel's sharp edge and resistance to shattering were the stuff of legend. If you carried Damascus steel, you were ahead of the curve.

Today, you can own the legend.

The Damascus Curva Knife celebrates those legendary blades. It uses modern Damascus steel, with the same rippled texture pattern on the blade, to create a curved folding knife that's 7 1/2" in total length. Italian Machine Guns

The primary medium machine gun of the Italian army during WWI was the Mitragliatrice Sistema F.I.A.T. - Revelli Modello 1914. Manufactured by Fabbrica Italiana Automobili Torino (F.I.A.T.), it was a water-cooled, retarded-blowback operated weapon that fired from a closed bolt. An oil reservoir lubricated each cartridge as it fed, and it utilized a sliding block magazine of 10 single-stack magazines, each holding five rounds, which was inserted into a large aperture from the left receiver wall. Cartridges are stripped by the bolt from the top of the compartment until the last one is fed, whereupon a spring-loaded indexing mechanism moves the block across one step to the right.

This system allowed the gun to be reloaded faster, but the weight of the magazine unbalanced the weapon, and it tended to collect dust and debris. While production ceased in 1919, large numbers were still in service at the beginning of WWII.

In the mid-1930s, a modified gun was adopted as the Mitragliatrice Revelli Modello 1935. It operated in the same manner as the Modello 1914, but did away with the cumbersome block magazine in favor of belt-feed, and the cartridge-oiling system was replaced with a fluted chamber. It was an air-cooled weapon featuring a quick-change barrel to enable extended fire, and it fired the powerful 8x59mm RB Breda cartridge.

The Cartucce cal. 8x59mm RB consisted of a rimless, bottle-necked case 59mm long, containing a 208-gr. boat-tail Spitzer bullet at a velocity of 2,600 fps.

But the Italian army was not fully satisfied with the Modello 1935, and, two years later, a new gun was adopted.

The Mitragliatrice Breda Modello 37 was a gas-operated, air-cooled weapon that, despite requiring oiled cartridges, earned a reputation for reliability. It featured a quick-change barrel system and was fed via 20-round steel strips of 8x59mm ammunition.

It proved very reliable and rugged—especially in desert conditions—and in addition to the Italian army, it was used by the Wehrmacht, while captured guns were prized by British troops.

After WWI, the Italians received large numbers of Austrian Schwarzlose M.1907/14 machine guns, which were issued to colonial and reserve troops. A water-cooled, belt-fed weapon, it used a delayed-blowback mechanism with a toggle lock and required lubricated cartridges to prevent extraction problems.

American and British forces invaded Sicily on July 10, 1943. Despite fierce resistance by German and Italian troops, by August 18, the Axis forces were forced to evacuate the island.

By this time, the Italian people were sick and tired of war. Italy's high casualties, war expense and repeated military setbacks had diminished Mussolini's aura. As the Wehrmacht exerted more and more control over the Italian armed forces and government, the Italians’ traditional dislike of Germans reached a breaking point. On July 25, the Gran Consiglio del Fascismo (Grand Council of Fascism) gave control of the armed forces to King Vittorio Emanuele III, who dismissed Mussolini as prime minister and had him arrested and imprisoned.

The new Italian government began secret negotiations with the Allies, and on September 3, 1943, signed an armistice with them. When the armistice was announced five days later, German troops were ordered to disarm the Italian forces. The Wehrmacht sent additional divisions to Italy and occupied strategic positions on the peninsula.

Many Italian units refused to disarm, and in Italy and the Balkans, open fighting broke out between them and the Germans. In Yugoslavia, Greece, and Albania, about Italian army units, the Esercito Cobelligerante Italiano (Italian Co-belligerent Army, or CBI) served alongside Allied units for the remainder of the Italian campaign.

On September 12, 1943, Mussolini was rescued by the Germans (the Grand Sasso Raid), who re-located him to northern Italy, where he set up a new Fascist state, the Repubblica Sociale Italiana (Italian Socialist Republic, or RSI).

Pro-Mussolini Italian soldiers formed the Esercito Nazionale Repubblicano (National Republican Army, or ENR) under Marshall Rodolfo Graziani. Eventually numbering about 300,000, they engaged in anti-partisan campaigns and served alongside the Wehrmacht until the German forces surrendered.¹

Several thousand Italians enlisted in the Waffen-Grenadier-Division der SS (italienische Nr. 1) and saw action against the Allies at the Battle of Anzio, where they suffered heavy casualties.

units were re-equipped with Allied—primarily British—uniforms and weapons.

Two submachine guns were produced in German-occupied northern Italy and supplied to the ENR and Wehrmacht: the Moschetti Automatico FNAB-43 and TZ-45. About 7,000 FNAB-43s were produced by Fabbrica Nazionale d'Armi di Brescia. It was unique in that it was made from mostly machined steel components, used a complicated delayed-blowback action, and its magazine could be folded forward under the barrel, while the buttstock could be folded alongside the right side of the receiver for compact storage.

The TZ-45 was made by Fabbrica Fratelli Giandosa from mostly stamped steel components, utilized simple blowback operation, a sliding metal stock and a grip safety behind the magazine housing. About 6,000 units were made during 1944–1945.

Italian partisan bands (partigiani) were organized beginning in September 1943, and began attacking German and ENR forces.

Originally armed with Italian and captured German weapons, by late 1944, the British SOE and American OSS began supplying them with weapons, the most common being British-supplied Sten Machine Carbines.

American forces provided the Italian partisans with M3A1 and UDM-42 submachine guns. The UDM-42 submachine gun was a 9mm, blowback-operated weapon made from all machined steel parts and fitted with a wooden butt and fore grip and dual 25-round magazines that were welded together so they could be swapped out quickly. Like the Sten, except for its bolt and barrel, the M3A1 was made completely from stamped steel and welded components and had a sliding steel butt.

A kit was available to convert M3A1s to fire the 9mm Parabellum cartridge using Sten gun magazines. Whether or not these were supplied to the partisans is not known, but I believe it likely, as they could then use locally available ammunition.

Axis attempts to suppress the partisans were extremely harsh and often resulted in more civilians joining their ranks. April 1945, saw a general partisan uprising, which liberated a number of major cities including Parma, Turin and Milan. German forces began to retreat northward until they officially capitulated on May 2, 1945.²

The Death Of Benito Mussolini

On April 27, 1945, Mussolini, his mistress Claretta Petacci, and a number of Fascist leaders were discovered by communist partisans while traveling in a German convoy near Lake Como. The partisans allowed the convoy to proceed if they handed over Mussolini—which the Germans readily agreed to. It is reported that Palmiro Togliatti, the Secretary General of the Italian Communist Party, ordered Mussolini’s execution. The following day, Mussolini, Petacci and several other Fascists were executed in the public square of the village of Giulino di Mezzegra, and their bodies hung up for public display.

Thus ended Il Duce’s “Second Roman Empire.”

THE FALSE-FLAG DRIVE TOWARD REGISTRATION, CONFISCATION

What the heck is Donald Trump up to?

By Vin Suprynowicz

The 2016 Republican Party Platform supports “the right of individuals to keep and bear arms,” properly calling it “a natural inalienable right that predates the Constitution and is secured by the Second Amendment.”

Yes, Mr. Trump has waffled over the years on such scams as an “assault weapons ban.” (“Assault weapons” have selector switches that allow them to fire full-auto. Since the BATF won’t allow them to be either imported or newly manufactured “for civilian use,” they’re so expensive as to be de facto banned for all but the wealthy or the extremely dedicated, already—even before we start talking about requiring our fingerprints and that $200 “tax” and agreeing to let the BATF knock on your door and “inspect your weapon” at any time.)

you down.” The NRA gave his campaign $30 million and endorsed him. I’ve got to believe 95 percent of gun owners voted for Trump.

Yet there he was, holding a big “What can be done?” White House discussion group with both Republican and Democrat “congresscritters” on Feb. 28, after the Feb. 14 Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School shooting in Florida.

Rep. Steve Scalise of Louisiana, who was shot by a Democrat activist last summer because he’s a Republican (hey, “Love Trumps Hate”), suggested interstate recognition of concealed-carry permits (“reciprocity,” as with driver’s licenses) would help. The President told him that couldn’t be included in “the bill” because it would never pass. (What?)

having sued the state of Florida one hour after they enacted a similar provision—Trump indicated he’d send the age-hike proposal to be studied by a special commission headed by Chief Schoolmarm Betsy DeVos (the political equivalent to burying it out behind the barn), tweeting “On 18 to 21 Age Limits, watching court cases and rulings before acting. States are making this decision. Things are moving rapidly on this, but not much political support (to put it mildly).”

THE SCHOOL DISTRICT BURIED, COVERED UP ALL CRIMES

Come on. The reason Nikolas de Jesus Cruz was able to buy the gun he used to shoot up his South Florida high school on Valentine’s Day was because school offi-

“ This guy sat there and offered the scheming gun-grabbers more than they got under eight years of Barack Obama!

The failed “assault weapons ban” of 1994–2004, was a lie (spear-headed by Democrats & RINO Republicans). It merely tried to ban certain cosmetic features (“descending” handgrips, bayonet lugs) on certain SEMI-automatic rifles, accomplishing no reduction in crime... though it did produce such charming and bizarre workarounds as the “thumb-hole stock.” (And let’s not forget that George Bush “The Second” stated that he would renew the ban and make it permanent if such a bill landed on his desk.)

But candidate Trump, who has a concealed-carry permit and says he sometimes carries, and who now says he believes trained teachers should be armed (a good step—it’s worked in Israel), said during the sixth Republican primary debate on Jan. 14, 2016, “I am a Second Amendment person. If we had guns in California on the other side where the bullets went in the different direction, you wouldn’t have 14 or 15 people dead right now. If even in Paris, if they had guns on the other side, going in the opposite direction, you wouldn’t have 130 people plus dead.”

After last year’s NRA convention, Mr. Trump tweeted “To the N.R.A., I can proudly say I will never, ever let

But President Trump then advised geriatric fascist Diane Feinstein of California and her cohorts about their renewed “assault weapons ban”—they keep referring to one-shot-per-trigger-pull rifles as “weapons of war,” when just by coincidence “weapons of war” are precisely what the Second Amendment protects—that she should “go ahead and put it in.”

This guy sat there and offered the scheming gun-grabbers more than they got under eight years of Barack Obama!

As recently as March 9, Mr. Trump was stumping for Republican Rick Saccone in a special congressional election in Pennsylvania, warning voters not to fall for Democrat Conor Lamb’s claims to be a gun person. Once he gets in there, “He’s going to vote the party line,...they’ll take away your Second Amendment rights,” Mr. Trump warned the cheering throng. Mr. Saccone lost, by the way.

Meantime, Mr. Trump almost simultaneously said he wanted to raise the minimum age for buying a long gun to 21, and that he wants to “ban bump stocks; they’re going to be gone”...even though the Florida school shooter didn’t use a bump-stock.

(Keeping track of this stuff is like watching high-level ping pong. Three days later, on March 12—the NRA cialists there in Broward County—and county government officials, including the sheriff—were so upset to have their school district declared the most crime-ridden in Florida for the year 2010–2011, that they signed a formal agreement, no, not to actually reduce the felonies COMMITTED by their young charges (that might have required actually getting tough), but merely to stop ARRESTING AND CHARGING their young inmates for such crimes as housebreaking, burglary, assault, vandalism, elder abuse, torturing animals, putting a gun to someone’s head, or posting online (as young Mr. Cruz did repeatedly, using his own name) death threats, including a warning that he intended to become “a professional school shooter” ...all so that the school district’s STATISTICS would look better.

Broward County deputies missed between 20 and 39 chances (depending on who’s counting) to arrest young Cruz on any or all of those charges. Then, when he suited up and started roaming the corridors of his high school, shooting to kill, Broward deputies, who voluntarily swear an oath to serve and to protect, hid outside the building, in stairwells or behind their cruisers—squatted there with their thumbs up their butts, listening to the gunfire—allowing late-arriving officers from another jurisdiction to enter the school first.

The politicians' response to THAT? "Hey, these things happen."

I'm not saying this troubled young man necessarily should have gone to prison for decades. But if normal procedures had been followed—if THE LAW had been followed—if his crimes had led to arrests and being processed through the courts, then even if he'd then received some kind of supervised probation, a paper trail would have been created, which would have warned and blocked any federally licensed firearm dealer from selling him a firearm.

Instead of solving that problem—the REAL problem—Donald Trump and the governor and state Legislature of Florida pushed to raise the age for purchasing a long gun to 21.

Is that likely to reduce the crime rate?

Not by very much, since (a) most teenagers who commit crimes with long guns steal them, and (b) most teen-aged hoodlums who commit crimes with guns prefer handguns...which they ALSO acquire illegally.

WHY STOP WITH HALF MEASURES?

But let's concede, just for the sake of argument, that we could somehow really deprive every American aged 18 to 20 of any and all firearms. Since crime might go down A LITTLE, you can expect our sneaky totalitarian judges, whose courthouses are protected by lots of armed bailiffs, to say that would be OK, as long as it would "enhance public safety even a little."

“Trump is pragmatic, a deal-maker. He doesn't want to sit walled up in the White House like the Man in the Ivory Tower, issuing laughable (but doctrinally pure) edicts that everyone would ignore.”

Of course, we might have to raise the age for admission into the armed forces to 21, since it doesn't make much sense to let someone join the armed forces if we've just declared it's not safe to allow them to touch firearms. But is that such a bad idea? Twenty-one-year-olds are more mature and responsible, less hot-headed. So it makes sense they'd make better soldiers and sailors. Right?

In fact, you know what? Instead of dismissing that argument, I'm going to embrace it. Because if crime could be reduced A LITTLE by raising the legal age for possessing a firearm to 21, why stop there? Couldn't it be shown, statistically, that MOST irresponsible firearm use occurs among the young—who certainly aren't as mature and responsible as they were in granddad's day, especially because of the way they're coddled and turned into useful idiots in today's mandatory socialist youth propaganda camps ("public schools")—being bused to the Legislature at taxpayer expense and conned into thinking they're "helping write our firearm laws"? (Government by kiddies! Brilliant!) Couldn't crime be reduced a lot more (except for rapes, of course—the rapists, I'll admit, would love this), if we were to raise the minimum age for possessing a firearm to 35?

The Spartans wouldn't let a man risk his life in the army till after he'd fathered a child to carry on his bloodline. I think we'd have a much more mature and responsible armed forces if we restricted membership to those over 35—many of whom need the job opportunities, frankly, after 28 years of Democrat-RINO job-destruction.

And why stop there? If it's OK to deprive some younger Americans of a God-given, constitutionally guaranteed right in order to "enhance public safety A LITTLE,"

what about driving? MOST reckless driving and drunk driving accidents involve drivers under 35. Why can't we raise the driving age to 35? What's a little inconvenience if it enhances public safety, even a little? Those young folks can hitchhike to work or ride a bicycle. Be good for 'em.

And why not the drinking age as well? Surely those 35 years old and older tend to drink more responsibly than a bunch of 18- or 21-year-old kids. Remember, "anything to enhance the public safety, even by A LITTLE!"

And I haven't even gotten to the most dangerous thing we foolishly allow these immature young stooges to do: voting. Won't you agree with me that this country would be a whole lot better off if we restricted voting to those more mature, more thoughtful, far less socialist citizens who are 35 or older? (Frankly, I think restricting voting to those over 55 might be even better, though I want to be reasonable, here; I'm willing to compromise at 35.)

I'm being a bit facetious, you understand, a bit sarcastic. But if instead of dealing with the REAL problem in Florida (let's recall the FBI, as well as the local police ignored NUMEROUS called-in tips—not anonymous rumors, very specific reports about how dangerous this Cruz kid was, by people willing to give their names), we're going to strip away the rights of millions of Americans who HAVEN'T committed any of young Cruz's many felonies, why stop with guns?

Police were called out to visit with the Florida "Valentine's Day" shooter-to-be 39 TIMES over the past seven years, for "[suspected] mentally illness, domestic violence, assault, threats, vandalism, Peeping Tom, shooting animals, putting a gun to someone's head..." yet neither cops or "Recoil Buddies," at which point such a law wouldn't be worth the paper it's printed on. So the task is figuring out to how to write a law that bans what the bump stock DOES...which even Mr. Trump admitted on March 9, in Pennsylvania, is "really complicated."

What they'll end up doing is trying to ban the manufacture, sale, or possession of anything that "increases a firearm's rate of fire."

Problem is, we've dealt with these sneaky, hate-filled gun-grabbers a lot longer than Mr. Trump. How creatively could you interpret that language, if you were a smug totalitarian gun-grabber, protected day and night by dozens of your own armed guards, but in reality, wishing to strip the arms from every tax-paying peasant, so you could stop them from getting so uppity, control them as well as Stalin and Hitler and Mao used to do, and slaughter a few million as an object lesson in obedience from time to time?

One thing that speeds up the ability of a shooter to reload a new round and get off a second and third shot in a hurry is a "gas-diversion system," which taps some of the exhaust gas from the barrel after it's sent the bullet on its way, directing that high-pressure gas back to push open the bolt, at which point a couple of springs can chamber a new round and close the bolt. In short, such language could be used to ban the "semi-automatic rifle," as developed by Thomas Crossley Johnson and others for such firearms as the Winchester Self Loading Rifle, Models 1903, 1905, 1907 and 1910.

Ban that "speed-of-fire enhancement," and we could soon be limited to our manual turnbolt 1903 Springfields and 1898 Mausers.

nor school officials ever made use of the Florida Mental Health Act of 1971 (as revised 2009 — "The Baker Act") to send him in for 72 hours' involuntary evaluation, at which point someone MIGHT have decided to submit his name to a list limiting gun purchases?

(That's what Mr. Trump was referring to when he famously said, back on Feb. 28, that we should "take their guns first, do the due process later." Indeed, temporarily securing the firearms of someone being sent in for evaluation (because of evidence of violent threats) under Florida's Baker Act probably does make sense. What Mr. Trump needs to remember, though, is that evil empires like the Soviet Union would routinely declare political opponents "mentally ill," sending them to "psychiatric facilities" to receive electric shock therapy, chemical lobotomies, whatever. By which time, it goes without saying, they'd long since been disarmed, while due process "waited awhile." Like, 73 years. This is why those of us who have read some history get nervous when the most powerful man in the world engages in such easily misinterpreted loose talk, Mr. President.)

A TROJAN HORSE CALLED 'BUMP STOCKS'

And that's not all. Mr. Trump also says he's going to get busy cooperating with the Democrats to ban bump stocks! "They're going to be gone," he said on March 9.

This part should be pretty obvious, so let's go through it quickly:

It wouldn't do any good to enact a law saying, "Everything called a 'bump stock' is hereby banned," since it would take at most two weeks for everyone to simply switch to labeling their bump stocks "Trigger Helpers"

But wait! Doesn't the manual turnbolt in fact speed up the rate of fire of the rifle way beyond what would be possible without that breech-loading brass cartridge? I think it does. So, wouldn't such a law allow the BATF to bar the magazine-fed breech-loading manual turnbolt rifle? I mean, Washington's Continental Army made do with muzzle-loading flintlocks, firing no more than two rounds a minute, didn't they? Why would you need to fire any faster than that?

Erich Pratt of Gun Owners of America (GunOwners.org) told Breitbart News in early March: "GOA is committed to fighting any regulation or ban on bump stocks. This issue goes far beyond stocks, because regulating devices that allegedly increase the rate of fire of a firearm can eventually be applied to match triggers, magazines or semi-automatic firearms. In essence, a bump stock ban opens the door to regulate and ban commonly-owned firearms and firearm parts... That is why GOA is already looking ahead to a lawsuit challenging the regulation."

TRYING TO LAUNCH THE DISCUSSION

We all know what Donald Trump is trying to do. We can sympathize, up to a point. He ran for office not just against Crooked Hillary and the Depraved Democrat Party (whose platform is basically open borders, "sanctuary" cities for Muslim terrorists, child-rapers and Salvadoran murderers, and shooting up pre-pubescent children with inappropriate hormones to turn them into sterilized "transgendered individuals"), but also against a shrieking socialist media/entertainment complex that continues to ridicule him as a clueless oaf, predicting his demise on a daily basis, AND fully half of the REPUBLICAN “ Reaching a compromise with the gun-grabbers is like offering Czechoslovakia to Hitler because in exchange, he promises you “Peace in Our Time.” He’s lying.

Party —“Never Trump” RINOS who would LOVE to see Trump die of a paralytic stroke (or by any other means) so the Democrats could again recapture the White House and both houses of Congress, so these strutting “Republican” poseurs could go back to saying “Of COURSE we’d love to repeal Obamacare and defend your gun rights and enforce the immigration laws, if only those darned majority Democrats would let us! (nudge nudge, wink wink).”

Trump is pragmatic, a deal-maker. He doesn’t want to sit walled up in the White House like the Man in the Ivory Tower, issuing laughable (but doctrinally pure) edicts that everyone would ignore. He wants to “peel off” some of those RINOs and even some of those Democrats, get them to make some deals, “get stuff done.” So, he invites them to the White House and plays “Mister Middle-of-the-Road,” getting giddy Dianne Feinstein all wet in the panties by telling her to “Go ahead, put your assault weapons ban in there, sweetheart.”

Ironically enough, the only thing that saved him from making some BAD deals in his first year in office was the unwillingness of the short-sighted, anti-American Democrats to go along with ANY compromise. Look how they refused to accept even his generous offer on “Dreamer Amnesty,” since it would have meant also adopting a sensible, merit-based immigration system like every other civilized nation, and REALLY “securing the southern border,” as the Democrats have been promising to do, cross their hearts and hope to die, ever since they duped

Ron Reagan into signing the LAST big amnesty (“and it’ll be the last one, we swear”), back in 1986.

The solution, I submit, is not to disown Donald Trump as a traitor, but simply to say, “We respect you, Mr. President, we agree with you on a lot of stuff, we’re glad you’re there on trade and immigration, we certainly hope you get around to Uranium One and FISA-gate, but on this you’re wrong. On this we have to stand against you, because we’ve dealt with the gun-grabbing scum for decades, and you cannot trust them to make and honor a deal, any deal.”

Reaching a compromise with the gun-grabbers is like offering Czechoslovakia to Hitler because in exchange, he promises you “Peace in Our Time.” He’s lying. He just needs a few months’ breathing space—while you idiots continue to disarm and dance around the Maypole and figure everything’s fine—till he’s ready to invade Poland.

In the past 80 years, no gun-grabbing politician in America has ever come out and admitted “What we really want is to register every ‘civilian’ firearm by serial number so we can proceed to confiscate them”...have they? And when they get a half-step in that direction—like, say, a huge, expensive, national “Instant Background Check” system (which would have done nothing to stop CIA paties Lee Oswald or Sirhan Sirhan, even assuming their bullets did the jobs in question)—do they ever tell their followers, “OK, we’ve accepted this compromise, so in good faith we have to be done with gun control for the next generation at least, time to move on to other issues”?

Of course not. The very next morning they’re scheming how to use the NEXT crime committed by some lunatic with a gun—some restless youth doped up on mood-altering drugs in his mandatory youth propaganda camp who gets ignored by these liberal bleeding hearts for his first 39 crimes so the background-check system THEY invented can’t possibly work—to take the NEXT giant step toward universal registration and confiscation.

Sorry, Mr. President. These people are never going to love you, respect you, work with you, or give you credit for anything you accomplish. We’re joining or re-upping our memberships in the NRA and GOA, and informing our congresscritters in no uncertain terms: Make My Day. Go ahead and vote for ANY new gun control, baby. ANY of it. We’re taking names. It’s not “you or the Democrat,” because we’re going to bounce you in the PRIMARY, Bozo. Here in Nevada, that means we’re going with a man of character: champion athlete Danny Tarkanian, who can send a message to Never Trumpers nationwide. And that message is: “You too can be tending bar on the night shift at the Dew Drop Inn come February of 2019. You think we can’t make it happen? We never did much like your lying ass, anyway.”

THE BOYCOTT OF DICK'S AND FIELD & STREAM STORES MAY BE WORKING!

HOW IS YOUR LOCAL STORE DOING?

By Vincent DeNiro, Editor of Firearms News

I received a text from my brother-in-law today regarding the Field & Stream store in Cranberry Township, Pennsylvania. He was curious as to what was going on since their parent company, DICK'S Sporting Goods, banned all "assault-style" firearms from both stores. The Cranberry Field & Stream location is an important one to DICK's, as it was the flagship store that launched the rest of the 25 or so locations for that chain; it is also a stone's throw to DICK'S national headquarters.

I remember when the store launched in 2013, and had its grand opening. Willie Robinson, of Duck Dynasty fame, showed up for it, and many of us gun owners were curious if the Field & Stream store would be carrying military-styled semi-auto firearms. I remember a story that stated that Willie Robinson himself inquired about the very same thing and would not show up for the event if these firearms were barred from the store, as had been the case at DICK'S stores after the Sandy Hook shooting. Turns out that DICK'S Sporting Goods did hold the ban of military-styled semi-auto firearms for the DICK'S stores, but not the case with Field & Stream. I remember visiting the store a couple of times and it had a nice section of Modern Sporting Rifles (MSRs) and accessories, including standard-capacity magazines of 30 rounds.

Mr. Ed Stack may not have realized that his headquarters is smack dab in Pennsylvania's Second Amendment country—he may have just stepped on his own "DICK'S."

Recently, Diane Feinstein visited Dick's Sporting Goods CEO, Ed Stack, and called him a "great American" for banning voting-age adults aged 18-20, who must be registered for the draft, from buying firearms in "his" store. She also stated that Stack is a "supporter of the Second Amendment." I would call him an absolute fool, who never studied any of our country's founders' writings regarding the Bill of Rights, and specifically the hundreds of documents and quotes regarding this right, as the Second Amendment has nothing to do with hunting and little to do with "self-defense" against robbers and rapists. Rather, it is a declaration that restricts the government from barring any American from keeping (owning) bearing arms, which would protect themselves from a tyrannical government, if such a government would ever be formed in the good old USA and go after its own people. It is a God-given right to defend one's life. This is an individual's freedom, like the freedom of speech or freedom against warrantless searches, etc.

BOYCOTT OF DICK'S AND FIELD & STREAM STORES

The founders were spot-on, knowing their history and that human nature would not change in the future—during the 20th century, governments around the world murdered over 100 million of their own disarmed citizens, mostly under Communism. And “which American political party has been the most against this right of self-defense against tyranny?” you may ask. None other than the American Communist Party, which has been pushing for gun bans since the 1930s. The Communist Party Lite, a.k.a. the Democrat Party, also does a good job in civilian disarmament. Just look at New York, California (Commieifornia), Massachusetts, etc. Citizens of many countries in Europe have more firearms freedoms than our red, white, and blue citizens of those states. Anyone who gets a compliment from the female version of Vladimir Lenin is no freedom-loving American, in my eyes.

But, the NRA is also partly to blame for this. While we hear about the NRA always talking about the Second Amendment, we rarely hear from them any more about the true meaning of the Second Amendment. Oh sure, the NRA is out there spending millions on concealed firearms freedom, national reciprocity and such, as well as great videos and instruction about home defense, but when was the last time we heard the NRA talk about owning firearms for defense against tyranny and what those firearms are supposed to be? And there's that LaPierre “bump-stock” push for ATF to re-determine the application of the un-Constitutional National Firearms Act of 1934, as well as the hypocrisy of “enforce the laws on the books” drivel. Really? Enforce the un-Constitutional gun laws that passed, which the NRA and gun owners failed in stopping? This is a matter for another article; let's get back to DICK'S.

DICK'S Sporting Goods can do as it wishes—so can 100,000,000 American gun owners. Maybe we can show them what happens when we do as we wish.

So, what did my brother-in-law see when he went to the flagship Field & Stream store? Well, first off, he didn't see any Modern Sporting Rifles, so-called “hi-cap” magazines, or parts or accessories for these firearms. He also did not see ANY customers in the large gun section of the store. This is very telling, as he was there after 5 p.m. on a Friday, in one of the busiest shopping suburbs of Pittsburgh, where there are a ton of gun owners. To give you an idea of how strong Pennsylvania is as a gun state (especially around Pittsburgh), about 20 years ago, Allegheny County (the county where Pittsburgh lies, and next to mostly rural Butler County, where Field & Stream is) had more than 44,000 concealed carry licenses issued—that was one of the highest in the United States! And that was 20 years ago. Mr. Ed Stack may not have realized that his headquarters is smack dab in Pennsylvania's Second Amendment country—he may have just stepped on his own “DICK'S.”

There are around 700 DICK'S stores and 26 or so Field & Stream stores out there, probably one and/or the other by you. Please stop in your local DICK'S or Field & Stream store and take a photo of the gun department and post the photo below (or a link to it), along with the date and time, and let's see how the gun owners' boycott of this corporation is doing. While you are there, maybe ask to speak to the manager and let him know how much you used to spend in his store and how you will not be shopping there any longer. As for me, I wouldn't buy a pair of shoe laces at DICK'S, nor would I go to Field & Stream, even if they were passing out free ammo.

DICK'S Sporting Goods can do as it wishes—so can 100,000,000 American gun owners. Maybe we can show them what happens when we do as we wish. FN

BREN LMG

After over 50 years of searching for these on the international market, we've finally obtained the classic .308 Bren as used from the 1950s through the 1990s! Last major use was in the Falklands War, but they are still blasting away in the Congo, Sudan, and other hot spots. Predecessor to the MAG-58, the Bren .308 LMGs evolved in many versions, whether converted from existing Bren models or made completely new, these guns were a formidable improvement on the .303 models. Stalwart enough for use in the Falkland operation where British 2 Para, employed them along side the MAG-58. The magazines were ideally made to interchange with the the L1A1 service rifle of the time. Sarco has obtained the Model L4A3 Bren Light Machine Gun and had the receivers cut to BATF specifications. All parts are included with the kit including the 4 pieces of Demil. Rec., and we include 1 - 30 rd. .308 magazine! The quality of the kit is generally in very good condition. This would make a fabulous 'semi' build, or display gun. Get one while you can because they are quite limited!..... $595.00 BREN122

RHINO PACK
Short Range Patrol Utility Backpack

ATAFREX Contractor Packs make great little 'Range Bags', are stackable & practical for field, camping, range, and overnight use. Rugged and in Grass Pattern Camo.

NEW ITEM!

Excursion pack was designed to chiefly hold ammunition and food for short range patrols. Main compartment is divided in three sections with an additional pouch on each end. Has MOLLE type fastener points and is made with two 30 rd. magazine pouches on the front and two 30 rd. pouches on top which are accessed behind one's neck when the pack is worn. No custom fancy snaps, or fasteners to break.... This is made basic to get the job done and these packs can be worn in tandem, one tied to the other top to bottom if more capacity is needed. Pack has shoulder straps and bottom straps for accessory stowage or tying onto attached lower packs. This is also a great little range bag and can carry your pistols and ammunition with snacks to boot! This is the only place to get the 'grass pattern camo pack' and it goes perfectly with the ATAFREX camo uniforms we carry. Roughly 18"x9"x7". Supply Limited. $49.95 MISC729

SPANISH CETME MODEL (C) RIFLE PARTS SET

Collaboration between German engineers and Franco's Spanish designers drove Spain to adopt the (C) version of the CETME rifle in 1974. Regarded as the lightweight option, the C rifle was adopted by the Spanish Army, Navy, and Air Force and chambered for the .308 Nato round. The German G-3 and the CETME are close cousins and share many of the same parts. In fact, 25 parts from the CETME and G-3 / HK91, are interchangeable with one another. Another 3 parts from the Trigger pack are also interchangeable as long as they are used as a set. The quality of the parts in this kit are remarkably excellent and outer parts are present with most of their original Parkerizing!

Cetme "C" receivers in stock! See our 20th ad or our website!

Our parts set includes all parts shown in the pictured parts breakdown above including the trunion and other necessary receiver parts for your semi auto build. We have barrels, slings, and 5 round magazines available separately and you can find plenty of low cost 20 rd mags on the market. Additionally we will have receivers available very soon. The kit's real visual strength is the wooden stock and forend which accentuate the rifle's appearance and makes it look sporty and more appealing than the plastic furniture of the G-3.

These kits are outstanding and we have not had this kind of quality in bulk kits since we had our Argentine FAL kits! STANDARD

Bush Hat

1960s Style

Manufactured like the originals with proper 'batting', screened mesh grommetted vents, and colored lining for visual use during Air operations.

U.S. MILITARY 'ADVISORS' BUSH HATS

Manufactured in the traditional labor intensive circular weave pattern for strength as used with the French Foreign Legion Bush Hat. A favorite of the early 1960s U.S. Advisors sent by President Kennedy to Vietnam and used and reproduced by numerous Vietnamese tailors for GIs throughout the war. Highly coveted during the war and almost impossible to find large sizes today! The hat wears well like a used pair of your favorite blue jeans and is perfect for the ranch, camping, or any rugged adventure where utility is important. Comes with a Saigon facsimile label of the period. Sizes available:

7-1/4", 7-1/2", 7-5/8", 7-3/4", 7-7/8". Vietnam Advisors Hat

$34.95 HAT06NGO CONTRACTOR FIELD JACKET

Gabardine twill heavy duty field jacket is perfect for the 'civilian' world as it has a touch of military style with many of the features that cost many hundreds of dollars from the affluent big name brand New England sports-wear companies. Features include a Hood inside the collar, waist and hip cinching straps, 4 capacious front pockets, 2 side breast pockets perfect for concealed compact pistol carry, mesh screened armpits, upper arm pockets, and unlike any field jackets that you will find on the market, ours has two slightly diagonal pockets on the back which will hold up to a liter bottle each, yet when not in use, keep a low profile. Perfect for the suburbs or ranch during Spring or Summer! Softens and fades nicely over time just like a pair of your favorite jeans. Very limited and Sarco is the only outfit that carries this jacket on the commercial market! Two sizes available: XL and 2XL. Sage green color. Specify size when ordering. Compare our price with the Big Name Brands! You'll save a bundle!..... $69.95 MISC706

CALTROPS

Used for 2,000 years to level the battle field, thwart soldiers, horsemen, vehicles and overwhelming numbers of advancing enemy stepping where they are placed. Romans were well known for employing them, especially when they needed to defend against overwhelming enemy on foot or on horseback. Also well known for use in Medieval Europe and in WW1 trench warfare. They covered many miles of stretches of 'no man's land'. There are many small cheap imitations on the market, but ours are solid steel and rise over 2-1/2 inches which was ideal for the variety of missions they were designed for in the 20th century. They are also as adept at being thrown and piercing items like a throwing star does. These are sold as display pieces/collector items only.

Sorry, no sales to CA, NY, IL or TX - Please check your local laws before ordering.

MLE-49 FRENCH INDOCHINA & ALGERIA BUSH HAT

Mle-49 'Le Chapeau de Brousse' Famous and very hard to find, French 'bush hat' as used by the French Foreign Legion during their conflicts in Vietnam and Algerian theaters of operation. We have a small number of new manufactured Mle-49 hats in the almost impossible to find size of U.S. size 7-1/2" (Large)!!! We also have some in 7-1/4". There are faithfully made in a heavy khaki cotton with traditional batting in the brim (not cardboard!). 2 grommets on each side with brim snap on one side. Because of the difficulty and labor intensive sewing pattern that encompassed the entire hat to make it durable to the standards of the Legion, we had to work with a number of manufacturers before we found one who could get it right! You'll love this hat on the farm, camping, travelling etc! We like it because it is truly a bush hat that looks 'hard core adventurer', and not commercial traveler. The type you'd wear all year round in Panama or Alaska! Sizes available: 7-1/4", 7-1/2", 7-5/8", 7-3/4" $29.95 MISC431

M1 GARAND WALNUT BAR STOOL STOCK PROJECT

M1 Garand Walnut Stocks for that special project! Outstanding value in original 'new' old stock walnut Garand stocks that have had the front ends cut and flattened by about an inch or so for a furniture contract that never got off the ground. You benefit because we want to move them and Cholly's got a friendly price in hand. These stocks are really beautiful and still have military cartouche markings on them and a smooth walnut finish. Great for making project furniture. These pictured items are just some of the great ideas you can try! Stocks are approximately 28 inches long.

1903 SPRINGFIELD BAR STOOL STOCKS

Here is a neat project for the home handyman. We have a big pile of unissued condition G.I. 1903 Springfield walnut stocks that were modified years ago to make into bar stools! Ouch! What a waste of good stocks! The stocks were shortened and notched to hold a seat and foot rest ring (not included). The fellow who was doing this went out of business and we bought all of his stock legs. To illustrate the concept we have made up a simple bar stool so you can see the possibilities. It is a shame he cut the stocks, as they were new, unissued G.I. 1903 stocks, but his loss can be your gain. Add a swivel seat of your choice to the top. All stocks have been pre-cut and drilled. You have to make 2 circular or octagonal spacers.

These steel 4140 receivers are specifically designed for the Garand, but we have been using them to make BM59 receivers. We have @ 100 pcs above what we need for our project. To explain further, the Italian Govt., originally modified Garand receivers for their BM59 rifle 'build', hence the crossover use of the Garand receiver.

With every purchase of one of these receivers, we will supply a blueprint for an M1 Garand receiver or a BM59 receiver as an option, depending upon your needs, at a cost of $24.95 - Available in either BM59 or M1 Garand Blueprint:

37MM RUSSIAN SPADE MORTAR (non-firing display)

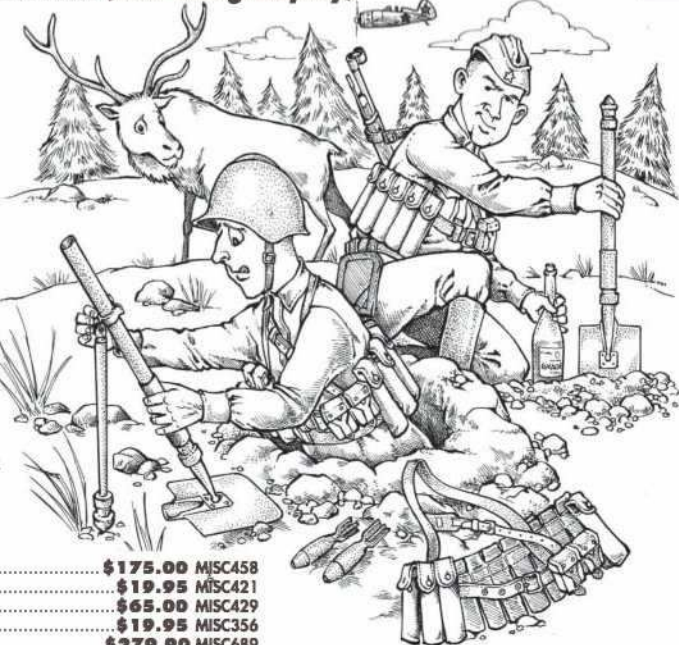

When is a spade not just a spade? When it's a Mortar tool Sarco has the 'Kamabee Keep' rework of the coolest mortar design in the history of warfare. Innovative Russian designers took the concept of the standard 'Entrenching Tool' that every soldier wore on his belt, and elevated it to 'Heavy Weapon Status', by allowing it to dig trenches & also fire 37mm Mortar Rounds! Designed in the late 1930s and fielded against Finland in late 1939/40 in the Russo Fin War, and throughout WW2 along the Russian Front.

Never been on the U.S. or World market! It can be attached to your belt using the canvas & leather carrier, be detached to operate as a small shovel, or used to lob rounds on the enemy. Transforms into a mortar in 815 seconds with practice. This is a new made replication of the original and is non-firing Sarco Inc. carries this item exclusively and they are currently in stock. We also have the 'late war' style 15 round bandolier used by troops to carry mortar ammunition including Mosin Nagant Rifle ammunition. To top it off, we have replica 37mm Mortar inert display rounds available too!

The only place to see this item in the entire world is in a Russian military museum. Truly this is a piece of ordnance lost to history! The design concept was amazing and its impact could still be amazing in this day & age!
Imagine a platoon of Infantry Riflemen also each carrying 15 mortar shells and working as a fire and maneuver machine. Stalinist purges and a failure to develop better ammunition put this idea to sleep before its time!

COMPLETE MAUSER ACTION, FULLY MACHINED & FORGED, LARGE RING EUROPEAN COMMERCIAL ACTIONS MANUFACTURED BY THE FAMED FIREARMS MAKER DUMOULIN OF 'BELGIUM'

Building your own Sniper, Target, or Varmint rifle has never been so enticing! Sarco worked for over a year to bring you this colossal opportunity to own a brand new, complete Dumoulin Mauser action at the best price on the world market!!!! Let's get to the objective specs, on what this means for you:

RECEIVER: This is an A-2 steel, forged / heat treated body which has been checked and gauged after each machining operation ensuring precision with strict tolerances and ultimately, superb mating with attached parts and adherence to Engineer drawings.

BOLT: A-2 Steel, one piece bolt, handle & knob with checkered flat on underside. The extractor is the traditional proven, 'claw type' extractor. Bolt Head diameter is set for the .30-06 family of cartridges. (A2 Chromium/molybdenum/vanadium is tool steel).

RECEIVER SPECIAL FEATURES: Flats with threaded holes and dovetails, permit the use of a variety of rings and bases. This feature eliminates the need for screwed on bases. Each flat is predrilled and threaded for standard 6-48 screws in 2 places. Flat tops are parallel and at the same level. These Actions have been engineered from original FN Belgian blue prints.

TRIGGER MECHANISM: The trigger is fully adjustable for sear engagement, over travel, and creep. The trigger body is made of steel.

TRIGGER GUARD: This trigger guard is fully machined from a steel forging and has a hinged FN/ Ruger style floorplate and latch. Believe it or not, I priced a similar trigger guard at the Shotshow from a German supplier and they wanted $800 for the guard. The Action capacity is 5 rds. of .30-06 length ammo.

FINISH: These Actions and Guards are blued. Some have bright bolts.

RECEIVER THREADS: Threads are standard 1.10 x 12 TPI.

BOLT-SPECIAL FEATURES: Strength of the forged bolt exceeds that of bolts in normal production. The specially designed bolt sleeve is an FN type and incorporates a Winchester style side swing 3 position blocking safety. This type of safety allows the use of a single or double set trigger in complete safety and preventing a discharge. Currently a similar bolt sleeve sells for $150.00-$250.00 separately.

WHY PURCHASE THIS ACTION? To our knowledge, no one in the world presently makes a fully machined '98 Mauser action. Cost would be prohibitive! Just the value of the bolt assembly & trigger guard equate to more than our cost of the action. This may be your last chance to buy a fully milled '98 Mauser Action! "We know of no fully milled actions being produced in the world. These were produced many years ago and we bought the entire lot for posterity. These are the same actions Dumoulin uses to build their $10,000. rifles!

WHAT DO THE PROS SAY? - We gave some of these actions to one of the best barrel manufacturers in the U.S., a Custom Rifle Mfr., and an exceptionally talented gunsmith who prepares gunsmithing school courses, to see what they thought. They praised these actions and commented that, according to normal gunsmithing practices, the following should be observed where building a rifle:

1. Lap the bolt lugs & receiver locking recesses for full contact and improved accuracy.
2. Face off and true the front of the receiver.
3. Shape the feed ramp.
4. Checking the bolt face to make sure it is square & true.
5. Like any other high end firearm, these actions require your final hand fitting and tuning. These are not operations that a machine can do and are best left to the assembler.

NOTE: The hardness of the receiver & bolt were checked and are at RC47/48. (Optimal!)

HERE'S THE DEAL: We would NOT be embarrassed to offer these actions at $595., but we will pass our lucky buy onto you at the fabulous price of only $349.95 GUN567 as an introductory price. Price may go up later if we find we are too generous!

FOR INQUIRIES ON WHERE TO GET SCOPE RINGS, PLEASE CONTACT: Andy Huebschmann, President Sunny Hill Enterprises, Inc. sales@sunnyhillgunparts.com, (920) 898-4707

After decades there is finally a square bridge Mauser available for you!

We have struck a special deal with ER SHAW, INC. for their barrels and gunsmithing services. We will include a flyer with the special prices with each Dumoulin action. Note: This offer is between the customer and ER SHAW, INC. Please contact them regarding work to be done. We will not ship actions to ER SHAW, INC.

We're selling 'em cheap enough so you can build a collector's gun as you hunt for the parts. PTR91 G3 RECEIVER

This US MADE receiver will work on your G3, HK91, PTR91 and CETME builds. Manufactured by PTR91 in Farmington Connecticut on HK factory tooling and equipment to exact HK specifications. Just like when building a house, the foundation must be strong and to exact measurements; this receiver will do the same for your build. Nothing but the very best in the market - that is the PTR91 receiver. Do not confuse this receiver with out of specs, cheaper receivers in the market. Start on the right foot and you will be proud of your finished product, further more, your build will have a higher re-sale value than any other build that has a less desirable receiver. No matter how you look at it, starting with this receiver is a "win win situation". Get them while supplies last!!! ... $195.00 $239.00 GUN445

This action is relatively similar in size to the classic renowned G-33/40 Mauser Mountain Carbine action. Complete Mauser action $99.95 each, or 10 for $895.00 GUN653

SPRINGFIELD 1903 'LOW NUMBER' RECEIVERS

(For 'Early 03' Collectors Only) Deep in the recesses of the warehouse from a batch of receivers purchased over 25 years ago, we have found a few 'Early Serial Number' receivers. These are sold only to make 'collector low # guns', and although made under government contract a century ago, you should consider these unsafe to fire because of metallurgy issues at the time of manufacture. Generally, they are regarded as a 'single heat treat' receiver used throughout WWI. We will only sell these with the condition that they are not to be fired if built into complete guns
